This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

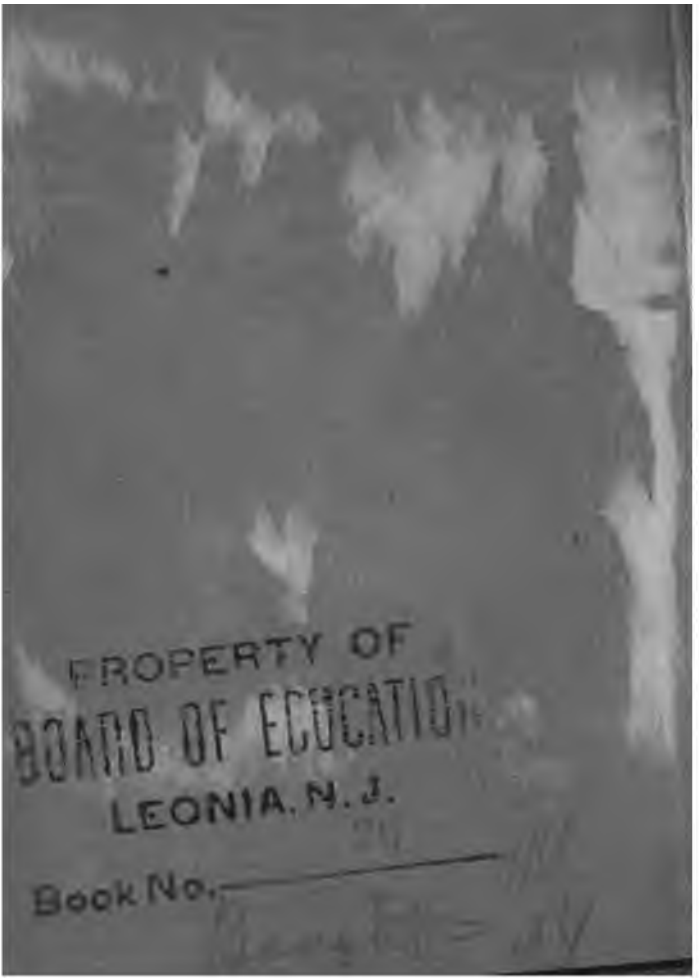
+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

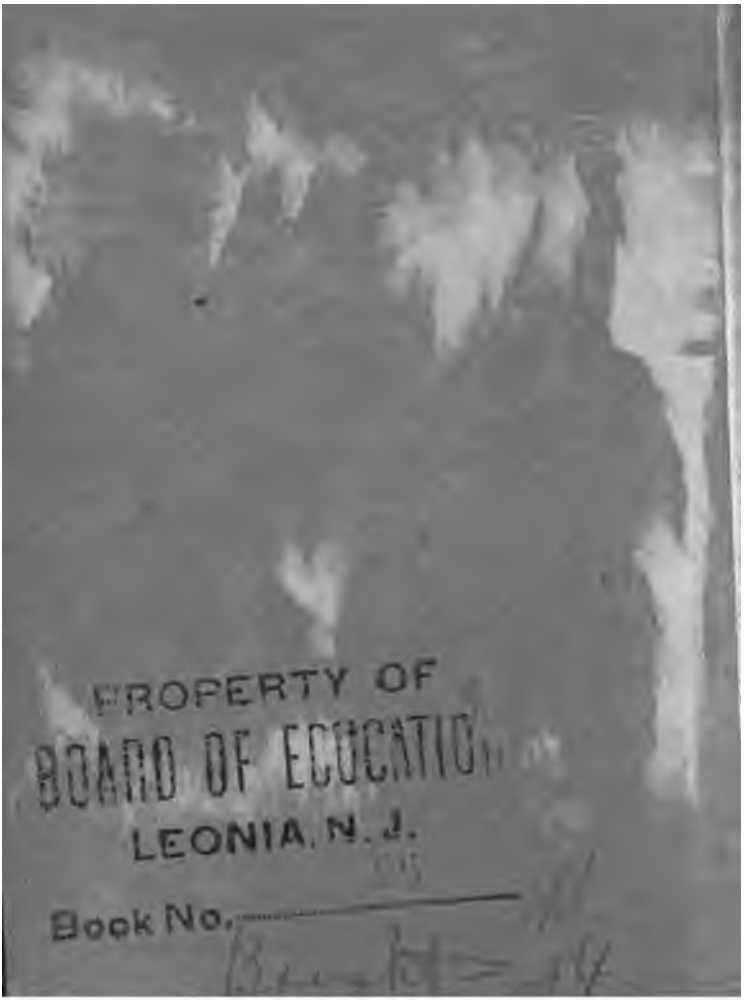
Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

CARLYLE'S ESSAY ON BURNS



PROPERTY OF
BOARD OF EDUCATION
LEONIA, N. J.
Book No.

This one
5G65-D7C-JADC



PROPERTY OF
BOARD OF EDUCATION
LEONIA, N. J.
Book No.

This One
5G65-D7C-JADC

CARLYLE'S

ESSAY ON BURNS

POEMS FROM BURNS

Macmillan's Pocket American and English Classics

A Series of English Texts, edited for use in Elementary and Secondary Schools, with Critical Introductions, Notes, etc.

16mo Cloth 25 cents each

Addison's Sir Roger de Coverley.
Andersen's Fairy Tales.
Arabian Nights' Entertainments.
Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum.
Austen's Pride and Prejudice.
Bacon's Essays.
Bible (Memorable Passages from).
Blackmore's Lorna Doone.
Browning's Shorter Poems.
Browning, Mrs., Poems (Selected).
Bryant's Thanatopsis, etc.
Bulwer's Last Days of Pompeii.
Bunyan's The Pilgrim's Progress.
Burke's Speech on Conciliation.
Burns' Poems (Selections from).
Byron's Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.
Byron's Shorter Poems.
Carlyle's Essay on Burns.
Carlyle's Heroes and Hero Worship.
Carroll's Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (Illustrated).
Chaucer's Prologue and Knight's Tale
Church's The Story of the Iliad.
Church's The Story of the Odyssey.
Coleridge's The Ancient Mariner.
Cooper's The Deerslayer.
Cooper's The Last of the Mohicans.
Cooper's The Spy.
Dana's Two Years Before the Mast.
Defoe's Robinson Crusoe.
De Quincey's Confessions of an English Opium-Eater.
De Quincey's Joan of Arc, and The English Mail-Coach.
Dickens' A Christmas Carol, and The Cricket on the Hearth.
Dickens' A Tale of Two Cities.
Dickens' David Copperfield.
Dryden's Palamon and Arcite.
Early American Orations, 1760–1824.
Edwards' (Jonathan) Sermons.
Eliot's Silas Marner.
Emerson's Essays.
Emerson's Early Poems.
Emerson's Representative Men.
English Narrative Poems.
Epoch-making Papers in U. S. History.
Franklin's Autobiography.
Gaskell's Cranford.
Goldsmith's The Deserted Village, She Stoops to Conquer, and The Good-natured Man.
Goldsmith's The Vicar of Wakefield.
Gray's Elegy, etc., and Cowper's John Gilpin, etc.
Grimm's Fairy Tales.
Hale's The Man Without a Country.
Hawthorne's Grandfather's Chair.
Hawthorne's Mosses from an Old Manse.
Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales.
Hawthorne's The House of the Seven Gables.
Hawthorne's Twice-told Tales (Selections from).
Hawthorne's Wonder-Book.
Holmes' Poems.
Homer's Iliad (Translated).
Homer's Odyssey (Translated).
Hughes' Tom Brown's School Days.
Huxley's Selected Essays and Addresses.
Irving's Life of Goldsmith.
Irving's Knickerbocker.
Irving's The Alhambra.
Irving's Sketch Book.
Irving's Tales of a Traveller.
Keary's Heroes of Asgard.
Kempis, à: The Imitation of Christ.
Kingsley's The Heroes.
Lamb's The Essays of Elia.
Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare.
Lincoln's Addresses, Inaugurals, and Letters.
Longfellow's Evangeline.
Longfellow's Hiawatha.
Longfellow's Miles Standish.
Longfellow's Miles Standish and Minor Poems.
Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn.
Lowell's The Vision of Sir Launfal.
Macaulay's Essay on Addison.
Macaulay's Essay on Hastings.
Macaulay's Essay on Lord Clive.
Macaulay's Essay on Milton.

Macmillan's Pocket American and English Classics

A Series of English Texts, edited for use in Elementary and Secondary Schools, with Critical Introductions, Notes, etc.

16mo Cloth 25 cents each

Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome.
Macaulay's Life of Samuel Johnson.
Malory's Le Morte d'Arthur.
Milton's Comus and Other Poems.
Milton's Paradise Lost, Books I. and II.
Old English Ballads.
Old Testament (Selections from).
Out of the Northland.
Palgrave's Golden Treasury.
Parkman's Oregon Trail.
Plutarch's Lives (Cæsar, Brutus, and Mark Antony).
Poe's Poems.
Poe's Prose Tales (Selections from).
Poems, Narrative and Lyrical.
Pope's Homer's Iliad.
Pope's Homer's Odyssey.
Pope's The Rape of the Lock.
Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies.
Ruskin's The Crown of Wild Olive and Queen of the Air.
Scott's Ivanhoe.
Scott's Kenilworth.
Scott's Lady of the Lake.
Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel.
Scott's Marmion.
Scott's Quentin Durward.
Scott's The Talisman.
Select Orations.
Select Poems, for required reading in Secondary Schools.
Shakespeare's As You Like It.
Shakespeare's As You Like It (Tudor).
Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors (Tudor).
Shakespeare's Coriolanus (Tudor) Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Shakespeare's Henry IV, Part I (Tudor)
Shakespeare's Henry V.
Shakespeare's Henry VI, Part I (Tudor).
Shakespeare's Henry VIII (Tudor).
Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Shakespeare's Macbeth (Tudor).
Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream.
Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream (Tudor).
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice (Tudor).
Shakespeare's Richard II.
Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (Tudor).
Shakespeare's The Tempest.
Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida (Tudor).
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Shelley and Keats: Poems.
Sheridan's The Rivals and The School for Scandal.
Southern Poets: Selections.
Southern Orators: Selections.
Spenser's Faerie Queene, Book I.
Stevenson's Kidnapped.
Stevenson's The Master of Ballantrae.
Stevenson's Travels with a Donkey, and An Inland Voyage.
Stevenson's Treasure Island.
Swift's Gulliver's Travels.
Tennyson's Idylls of the King.
Tennyson's In Memoriam.
Tennyson's The Princess.
Tennyson's Shorter Poems.
Thackeray's English Humourists.
Thackeray's Henry Esmond.
Thoreau's Walden.
Virgil's Æneid.
Washington's Farewell Address, and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration.
Whittier's Snow-Bound and Other Early Poems.
Woolman's Journal.
Wordsworth's Shorter Poems.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
NEW YORK · BOSTON · CHICAGO
DALLAS · SAN FRANCISCO

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED
LONDON · BOMBAY · CALCUTTA
MELBOURNE

THE MACMILLAN CO. OF CANADA, LTD.
TORONTO

Most faithfully Yours
T. Carlyle

CARLYLE'S ESSAY ON BURNS

WITH

THE COTTER'S SATURDAY NIGHT

AND OTHER POEMS FROM BURNS

Edited with Notes and an Introduction

BY

WILLARD C. GORE

Professor of English Literature in the Armour Institute of Technology, Chicago, Illinois

New York

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., LTD.

1915

All rights reserved

COPYRIGHT, 1900,

BY THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.

Set up and electrotyped August, 1900. Reprinted April, 1902; January, August, 1903; February, October, 1904; July, 1905; March, July, 1906; February, July, 1908; July, 1909; January, 1910; February, October, 1911; July, 1912; February, 1913. January, June, 1914 June, 1915.

CONTENTS

PAGE

INTRODUCTION:

Thomas Carlyle and Robert Burns ix
The Writings of Carlyle xxix
The Text of the Essay on Burns xxxi
Original and Revised Versions of the Text . . xxxiii
Appreciations xxxviii
References on Carlyle xliv

ESSAY ON BURNS 1

POEMS FROM BURNS:

The Cotter's Saturday Night 103
Man was made to Mourn 112
Prayer in Prospect of Death 116
My Father was a Farmer 117
The Farmer's Salutation to his Mare 120
To a Mouse 125
The Wounded Hare 127
Poor Mailie's Elegy 128

PAGE

A Winter Night 131
Winter 135
To a Mountain Daisy 136
Afton Water 139
The Banks of Doon 140
Duncan Gray 141
Auld Lang Syne 143
Highland Mary 144
To Mary in Heaven 146
Ode to Memory of Mrs. Oswald 147
My Nannie's Awa' 149
O, wert thou in the Cauld Blast? 150
John Anderson my Jo 150
Farewell to Ayr 151
My Heart's in the Highlands 153
Macpherson's Farewell 154
Bannockburn 155
The Dumfries Volunteers 156
A Man's a Man for a' that 158

NOTES 16

INDEX TO NOTES 17

GLOSSARY . . . . . .

INTRODUCTION

THOMAS CARLYLE AND ROBERT BURNS

"We have often wondered how he ever found out Burns," remarked Thoreau in commenting on the fact that Carlyle was not a critic of poetry, but that his sympathy was rather with men of endeavor, "and must still refer a good share of his delight in him to neighborhood and early association."[1]

There were common elements in their lives which helped to make Carlyle a sympathetic critic of Burns. Not only did both belong to the great clan of Scotchmen, but both came from the same part of Scotland, the same "neighborhood"—the Lowlands; Burns, from Ayrshire on the Firth of Clyde; Carlyle, from Dumfriesshire, bounded on the south and east by Solway Firth and the English border. Burns was born (January 25, 1759) in a clay-built cottage, reared by his father's own hands, on a farm about two miles from the town of Ayr. Carlyle was born (December 4, 1795, one year before the death of Burns) in a house also built by his father, who was a carpenter and stonemason by trade, in the small market town of Ecclefechan, Annandale, consisting at that time of but a single street. Both came of sturdy Scotch peasant stock; and both owed much to the rugged simplicity and unaffected piety — in the Roman sense of the word — of their early home influences. The Cotter's Saturday Night, which is counted amongst the finest expressions of Burns's poetic genius, and James Carlyle in Carlyle's Reminiscences, which is different in form and substance, yet as unapproachable in its way, are in a sense tributes — high and lasting tributes, or, if you like the word, monuments — to these early home influences. Burns's and Carlyle's fathers were alike in many respects, though Carlyle's was far the sterner. What Carlyle says of Burns's father on pages 58 and 59 of this Essay on Burns could be applied almost word for word to his own father. In addition to the high and rare qualities of character dwelt upon in this passage, both possessed a native gift of speech; in the case of Carlyle's father especially, of speech bold, free, and pithy. Said Mr. John Murdock, the teacher of Burns, in describing his father: "He spoke the English language with more propriety (both with respect to diction and pronunciation) than any man I ever knew with no greater advantages. This had a very good effect on the boys, who began to talk and reason like men much sooner than their neighbors."[1]

[1] Thoreau, "Thomas Carlyle and His Works," A Yankee in Canada, p. 234.

The following passage from Carlyle's tribute to his father is often quoted:—

"In several respects, I consider my Father as one of the most interesting men I have known. He was a man of perhaps the very largest natural endowment of any it has been my lot to converse with: none of us will ever forget that bold glowing style of his, flowing free from the untutored soul; full of metaphors (though he knew not what a metaphor was), with all manner of potent words (which he appropriated and applied with surprising accuracy, you often could not guess whence); brief, energetic; and which I should say conveyed the most perfect picture, definite, clear not in ambitious colors but in full white sunlight, of all the dialects I have ever listened to. Nothing did I ever hear him undertake to render visible, which did not become almost ocularly so. Never shall we again hear such speech as that was: the whole district knew of it; and laughed joyfully over it, not knowing how otherwise to express the feeling it gave them. Emphatic I have heard him beyond all men. In anger he had no need of oaths his words were like sharp arrows that smote into the very heart. The fault was that he exaggerated (which tendency I also inherit); yet only in description and for the sake chiefly of humorous effect: he was a man of rigid, even scrupulous veracity; I have often heard him turn back, when he thought his strong words were misleading, and correct them into measurative accuracy."[1]

[1] Currie, The Works of Robert Burns, fifth edition, Vol. I., p. 95.

As to their outward educational opportunities, however, Burns and Carlyle had little in common. The school days of the former were practically over when he was ten years of age, whereas at the same age the latter was beginning his preparation for a university course.

Robert Burns apparently made the most of the few opportunities for education that were thrown in his way. In the spring of 1765 his father and four of the neighbors clubbed together and engaged a young man by the name of John Murdock to take charge of a little school, which happened to be situated only a few yards from the "mud edifice" of the Burns family. "My pupil, Robert Burns, was then between six and seven years of age; his precep-

[1] Carlyle, Reminiscences, edited by Norton, i., p. 5.

tor about eighteen," wrote Mr. Murdock some years later. "Robert, and his younger brother Gilbert, had been grounded a little in English before they were put under my care. They both made rapid progress in reading, and a tolerable progress in writing. In reading, dividing words into syllables by rule, spelling without book, parsing sentences, etc., Robert and Gilbert were generally at the upper end of the class, even when ranged with boys by far their seniors. The books most commonly used in the school were, the Spelling Book, the New Testament, the Bible, Mason's Collection of Prose and Verse, and Fisher's English Grammar. They committed to memory the hymns, and other poems of that collection, with uncommon facility. This facility was partly owing to the method pursued by their father and me in instructing them, which was, to make them thoroughly acquainted with the meaning of every word in each sentence that was to be committed to memory. By the bye, this may be easier done, and at an earlier period, than is generally thought."[1] Burns's way of putting the same fact is characteristic, "Though it cost the schoolmaster some thrashings, I made an excellent English scholar; and by the time I was ten or eleven years of age, I was a critic

[1] Letter to Mr. Walker of Dublin, dated London, Feb. 22, 1799, Currie (op. cit.), pp. 86–96.

in substantives, verbs, and particles."[1] In 1766 his father moved to another farm, Mount Oliphant, which was so far from the school that the boys could no longer attend regularly; and on the departure of their teacher and friend some months later from that part of the country their attendance ceased altogether. "There being no school near us," wrote his brother Gilbert, "and our little services being useful on the farm, my father undertook to teach us arithmetic in the winter evenings, by candle-light; and in this way my two eldest sisters got all the education they received."[2] At the age of thirteen he was sent with his brother Gilbert, "week about" during the summer quarter, to the parish school of Dalrymple, to improve his writing. His brother concludes the narrative of his schooling thus: "The summer after we had been at Dalrymple school, my father sent Robert to Ayr, to revise his English grammar, with his former teacher [Murdock]. He had been there only one week, when he was obliged to return, to assist at the harvest. When the harvest was over, he went back to school, where he remained two weeks; and this completes the account of his school education, excepting one summer quarter, some time afterwards [in his nineteenth year], that he attended the parish school of Kirk-Oswald . . . to learn surveying."[1] During the last two weeks that he was with Murdock he made so good a start in French, that with the aid of a French dictionary and grammar, and the Aventures de Télémaque by Fénelon he acquired "in a little while," so writes his brother, "such a knowledge of the language, as to read and understand any French author in prose."

[1] Autobiographical letter to Dr. Moore, Currie (op. cit.), p. 37.

[2] Currie (op. cit.), p. 61.

Notwithstanding the good use to which outward opportunities for education had been put whenever they presented themselves, so few and limited had they been, although supplemented by considerable reading, that Burns had to work out single-handed, for the most part, the intellectual tools with which to direct his life and shape his art. His poverty was not without its rich compensations, but it remorselessly denied him access to the great intellectual storehouses of human experience at a time when his genius might have entered and claimed its own.[2] Not so in the case of Carlyle.

Carlyle, if not precocious, at least gave evidence when a child that there was something unusual in him. Before entering the village school he had learned to read from his mother, and under the hand of his father had taken his first steps in arithmetic. "I remember, perhaps in my fifth year, his teaching me Arithmetical things: especially how to divide (of my letters taught me by my mother, I have no recollection whatever: of reading scarcely any): he said, 'This is the divider (divisor) this' etc., and gave me a quite clear notion how to do. My mother said I would forget it all; to which he answered: Not so much as they that never learned it. — Five years or so after, he said to me once: 'Tom, I do not grudge thy schooling, now when thy Uncle Frank owns thee to be a better Arithmetician than himself.'"[1] At the age of seven he was reported by the village schoolmaster as "complete in English," and soon began the study of Latin under the pastor and his son. In 1806 he was sent to the academy or "Grammar School" at Annan, a small town on Solway Firth about five miles south of Ecclefechan, to prepare for the University with a final outlook toward the ministry. Here, in spite of mechanical teaching and barbarian associates,[2] he learned to read

[1] Currie (op. cit.), p. 66.

[2] Cf. pp. 8, 9, and 59 of the Essay on Burns.

[1] Reminiscences, i., p. 45.

[2] For points of interest in regard to his life at the Annan Academy see Froude, Thomas Carlyle, A History of the First Forty Years of his Life, Vol. I., chap. ii.; Reminiscences, i., p. 46; and Sartor Resartus, Book II., chapter on "Pedagogy."

Latin and French fluently, and made considerable progress in algebra and geometry; so that he was prepared to enter the University of Edinburgh at the age of thirteen — in the fall of 1809.

His career at the University was not distinguished by brilliant scholarship. The only subject, as taught at the University, which aroused his enthusiasm was mathematics, in which he made marked progress, though winning no prizes; and, conversely, the professor of mathematics seems to have been the only member of the faculty who discerned in him any gift above the average. His acquaintances among the students were few; but as for these few intimate acquaintances, "intellectually and morally, he had impressed them as absolutely unique among them all, — such a combination of strength of character, rugged independence of manner, prudence, great literary powers, high aspirations and ambition, habitual despondency, and a variety of other humors, ranging from the ferociously sarcastic to the wildly tender, that it was impossible to set limits to what he was likely to become in the world."[1] Perhaps the chief benefit derived from the University was the wide course of reading which he pursued independently throughout the four years of residence there.[1] "What the Universities can mainly do for you, — what I have found the University did for me," said Carlyle many years afterward (1866) in his inaugural address to the students of the same University, "is, That it taught me to read, in various languages, in various sciences; so that I could go into books which treated of these things, and gradually penetrate into any department I wanted to make myself master of, as I found it suit me." A passage from the chapter on "Pedagogy" in Sartor Resartus is at least mythically autobiographical on this point: "Nay from the chaos of that Library, I succeeded in fishing-up more books perhaps than had been known to the very keepers thereof. The foundation of a Literary Life was hereby laid. I learned, on my own strength, to read fluently in almost all cultivated languages, on almost all subjects and sciences; farther, as man is ever the prime object to man, already it was my favorite employment to read character in speculation, and from the Writing to construe the Writer. A certain ground-plan of Human Nature and Life began to fashion itself in me; wondrous enough, now when I look back on it; for my whole Universe, physical and spiritual, was as yet a Machine! However, such a conscious, recognised groundplan, the truest I had, was beginning to be there, and by additional experiments might be corrected and indefinitely extended."

[1] Masson, "Carlyle's Edinburgh Life" in Edinburgh Sketches and Memories, p. 243.

[1] For lists of the books drawn by Carlyle from the University library during the first two years of residence, see Masson (op. cit.), p. 231.

Carlyle's practical career, if it may be so called, began with schoolmastering. Soon after the completion of his college course, he was appointed mathematical tutor in the Annan Academy, the school in which he had formerly been a pupil. Two years later he gave up the position to accept the mastership of a school at Kirkcaldy, a town in northeastern Scotland by the Fife sea-shore. Meanwhile he had kept up a half-hearted connection with the Divinity School at the University, out of regard for the long cherished hopes of his parents. As time went on, however, he grew farther and farther away alike from the idea of entering the ministry and from the vocation of teaching. "Finding I had objections [to entering the ministry], my father, with a magnanimity which I admired and admire, left me frankly to my own guidance in the matter, as did my mother, perhaps still more lovingly, though not so silently." And so the connection with the Divinity School and all the connection implied was severed. Schoolmastering, also, after four years of it, became intolerable. In the fall of 1818 he resigned his position at Kirkcaldy and went to Edinburgh with very indefinite prospects.

These years at Edinburgh were years of miserable, groping uncertainty, of bitter inward struggles. It was a period "on which he said that he never looked back without a kind of horror." He began the study of law, which "seemed glorious to him for its independency;" but presently gave it up in disgust as "a shapeless mass of absurdity and chicane." Dyspepsia had begun to torment him — "a rat gnawing at the pit of his stomach." He managed to eke out his savings by giving private lessons in mathematics; it was not that he had to face actual poverty or outward hardships, but that he had not yet found the work that he could do with his whole strength. "Hope hardly dwelt in me . . .; only fierce resolution in abundance to do my best and utmost in all honest ways and suffer as silently and stoically as might be, if it proved (as too likely!) that I could do nothing. This kind of humor, what I sometimes called of 'desperate hope,' has largely attended me all my life."

It would be difficult to over-emphasize the significance, not only for his own intellectual life, but also, as it proved, for the intellectual life of England and America, that at this crisis he began the study of the German language and literature. The years 1819–

1821 were chiefly devoted to mastering the language and reading deep and far into the literature. In 1820 he could write to one friend, "I could tell you much about the new Heaven and new Earth which a slight study of German literature has revealed to me." A few months later he wrote to another friend, "I have lived riotously with Schiller, Goethe, and the rest: they are the greatest men at present with me."[1] Carlyle had found a task into which he could put, for a time at least, his whole strength, — the introduction and interpretation to English thought and practice of the unifying and fructifying ideas of "Schiller, Goethe, and the rest." No man was more fit to do this than he of whom Goethe himself subsequently said, "He knows our literature better than we do ourselves." And no man than he felt more keenly the dualism into which much of contemporary English thought and literature had fallen, — the dualism of materialism versus sentiment; of things versus heart, — upon which the unifying and fructifying ideas of "Schiller, Goethe, and the rest," might exert an idealistic influence and do what Burns failed to do — "change the whole course of British literature."[2]

Carlyle's new interest soon found expression. In

[1] Masson (op. cit.), p. 283.
[2] Cf. the Essay on Burns, p. 59.

1822 his article on "Goethe's Faust" appeared in the New Edinburgh Review. In 1823 he began his Life of Schiller and his translation of Goethe's Wilhelm Meister, which were published the year following. During these important years he was fortunately relieved from the necessity of doing hack work of any kind, and was able to devote the best part of his time to study and writing, through a private tutorship to the sons of Mr. Charles Buller, which came to him through the recommendations of his friend, Edward Irving. It yielded a salary of two hundred pounds. He found the boys congenial and interesting. His mornings and evenings were his own. Still, after two years, the relationship became irksome; and at his own suggestion was terminated. After a visit to London and to Paris in 1824, made possible in part by the tutorship, he returned to Annandale; and early in 1825 settled with his brother on a farm called Hoddam Hill. Here his brother farmed while Carlyle alternately toiled on his translations of German romances and rode about on horseback. It was a season of comparative peace, of growth, of renewed health, of preparation for more important work.

"With all its manifold petty troubles, this year at Hoddam Hill has a rustic beauty and dignity to me and lies now like a not ignoble russet-coated Idyl in my memory; one of the quietest on the whol and perhaps the most triumphantly important of my life. . . . I found that I had conquered all my scepticisms, agonizing doubtings, fearful wrestlings with the foul and vile and soul-murdering Mud-gods of my Epoch; . . . and was emerging, free in spirit, into the eternal blue of ether. . . . I had, in effect, gained an immense victory. . . . Once more, thank Heaven for its highest gift. I felt then, and still feel, endlessly indebted to Goethe in the business: he, in his fashion, I perceived, had travelled the steep rocky road before me, — the first of the moderns."[1]

We are now approaching the time when Carlyle "found out Burns." October 27, 1826, he had married Jane Baillie Welsh. After eighteen months' residence at 21 Comely Bank, Edinburgh, during which time Carlyle formed an important friendship with Francis Jeffrey, editor of the Edinburgh Review, who accepted his articles on "Richter" and "The State of German Literature"— the beginning of a long series of famous historical and critical essays,— they moved (May, 1828) to Craigenputtock,— the "Craig o' Putta," or Hill of the Hawks,— a lonely moorland farm, belonging to Mrs. Carlyle, more than a mile from the nearest house and fifteen miles from the nearest town. This was to be their home for the next six years, broken only by a seven months' visit to London (August, 1831–March, 1832) and a winter in Edinburgh (1833). Here some of Carlyle's best work was to be done. Of Craigenputtock itself and of Carlyle's reason for going there the reader may best judge from the following extract from a letter to Goethe:—

[1] Reminiscences, ii., p. 179.

CRAIGENPUTTOCK, DUMFRIES,
25th September, 1828.

* * * * * * *

You inquire with such affection touching our present abode and employments, that I must say some words on that subject, while I have still space. Dumfries is a pretty town, of some 15,000 inhabitants; the Commercial and Judicial Metropolis of a considerable district on the Scottish border. Our dwelling place is not in it, but fifteen miles (two hours' riding) to the northwest of it, among the Granite Mountains and black moors which stretch westward through Galloway almost to the Irish Sea. This is, as it were, a green oasis in that desert of heath and rock; a piece of ploughed and partially sheltered and ornamented ground, where corn ripens and trees yield umbrage, though encircled on all hands by moorfowl and only the hardiest breeds of sheep. Here, by dint of great endeavor we have pargetted and garnished for ourselves a clean substantial dwelling; and settled down in defect of any Professional or other Official appointment, to cultivate Literature, on our own resources, by way of occupation, and roses and garden shrubs, and if possible health and a peaceable temper of mind to forward it. The roses are indeed still mostly to plant; but they already blossom in Hope; and we have two swift horses, which, with the mountain air, are better than all physicians for sick nerves. That exercise, which I am very fond of, is almost my sole amusement; for this is one of the most solitary spots in Britain, being six miles from any individual of the formally visiting class. It might have suited Rousseau almost as well as his island of St. Pierre; indeed I find that most of my city friends impute to me a motive similar to his in coming hither, and predict no good from it. But I came hither purely for this one reason; that I might not have to write for bread, might not be tempted to tell lies for money. This space of Earth is our own, and we can live in it and write and think as seems best to us, though Zoilus[1] himself should become king of letters. And as to its solitude, a mail-coach will any day transport us to Edinburgh, which is our British Weimar. Nay, even at this time, I have a whole horse-load of Frei German, American, English Reviews and Journ were they of any worth, encumbering the table my little library. Moreover, from any of our heig I can discern a Hill, a day's journey to the eastw where Agricola with his Romans has left a camp the foot of which I was born, where my Father Mother are still living to love me. Time, theref must be left to try: but if I sink into folly, my and not my situation will be to blame. Neverthe I have many doubts about my future literary activi on all which, how gladly would I take your coun Surely, you will write to me again, and ere long; t I may still feel myself united to you. Our l prayers for all good to you and yours are ever w you! Farewell!

[1] A Greek rhetorician of the fourth century, noted for his adverse criticisms of Homer. — ED.

"T. CARLYLE."

A few days before writing this letter — Septem 16 — Carlyle, according to a note in his journal, l "finished a paper on Burns." The same letter c tains the following paragraph, which, together w the passage quoted above, came to have the disti tion, some two years later, of being quoted and c mented upon by Goethe in his "Dedication

[1] Correspondence between Goethe and Carlyle, edited Norton, pp. 124–126. Cf. interesting letter to De Quin dated December 11, 1828, in Life of Carlyle by H. J. Nicho

Introduction to the Translation of Carlyle's Life of Schiller."[1] "The only thing of any moment I have written since I came hither is an Essay on Burns, for the next number of the Edinburgh Review, which, I suppose, will be published in a few weeks. Perhaps you have never heard of this Burns, and yet he was a man of the most decisive genius; but born in the rank of a peasant, and miserably wasted away by the complexities of his strange situation; so that all he effected was comparatively a trifle, and he died before middle age. We English, especially we Scotch, love Burns more than any other Poet we have had for centuries. It has often struck me to remark that he was born a few months only before Schiller, in the year 1759, and that neither of these two men, of whom I reckon Burns perhaps naturally even the greater, ever heard the other's name; but that they shone as stars in opposite hemispheres, the little Atmosphere of the Earth intercepting their mutual light."

Goethe's reply to Carlyle's letter contains these wise and appreciative words:—

[1] Appendix I. to the Correspondence between Goethe and Carlyle. In the "Dedication," etc. Goethe quotes also from the Essay on Burns a passage beginning, "Burns was born in an age," etc. (p. 9) to "a hundred years may pass on, before another is given us to waste" (p. 14), with the exception of a few sentences.

"With your countryman Burns, who, if he were still living would be your neighbor, I am sufficiently acquainted to prize him. The mention of him in your letter leads me to take up his poems again, and especially to read once more the story of his life, which truly, like the history of many a fair genius, is extremely sad.

"The poetic gift is, indeed, seldom united with the gift of managing life, and making good any adequate position.

"In his poems I have recognized a free spirit, capable of grasping the moment with vigor, and winning gladness from it."

We are beginning to understand, at last, how not only "neighborhood and early association" but the very inequalities of their opportunities served to bring Carlyle and Burns closer together. There are few finer examples of the supremacy of character through and over culture than that afforded by Carlyle, when, after his university training, such as it was, after his prodigious reading in history, poetry, and philosophy, unrivalled by that of any Englishman of his time, and covering the whole range of modern literature, — French, German, and English, — after having earned from Goethe, the greatest living authority in literature, the high commendation of being one who "rested on an original foundation" and who "had the power to develop in himself the essentials of what is good and beautiful," he met Robert Burns, — literally on his own ground, — and looked into his face with the level, searching, yet sympathetic glance of a reader of men.

THE WRITINGS OF CARLYLE

SINCE the Essay on Burns not only lights the way to a deeper appreciation and enjoyment of the poems of Burns, but also may serve as a natural introduction to the subsequent writings of Carlyle, it remains to speak briefly of the latter. The outward events of Carlyle's life from now on were comparatively few and unimportant. In the spring of 1834 he left Craigenputtock for London, where he settled at No. 5 Cheyne (pronounced Chainey) Row in the suburb of Chelsea, two miles west of the city on the north bank of the Thames. This was to be his home for nearly half a century, or until the day of his death, February 5, 1881; here he resided continuously with the exception of annual visits to his old home in Scotland, and a few short trips to Ireland, France, and Germany. In the work done here during the next thirty years is to be found his truest biography, the sincere reflection of his life. Before leaving Craigenputtock, however, he had written what is perhaps still the most famous of his works — Sartor Resartus — which was "mythically autobiographical."

The following rough classification of Carlyle's most important writings may serve as a guide to further reading. They may be divided into four groups. To the first group belong the translations from the German (1823–1826). To the second belong the biographies and the biographical and critical essays, including the Life of Schiller (1824), Oliver Cromwell's Letters and Speeches (1840–1845), Heroes and Hero Worship (1841), the Life of John Sterling (1850), and most of the Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, among which of special value are the essays on Burns (1828), Voltaire (1829), Goethe's Works (1832), Boswell's Life of Johnson (1832), and Diderot (1833). In a third group might be placed the historical and ethical writings, — the essay on Signs of the Times (1829), Sartor Resartus (1831), the essay on Characteristics (1831), the French Revolution (1843–1847), the essay on Chartism (1839), Past and Present (1843), Latter Day Pamphlets (1850), and the History of Frederick the Great (1851–1865). Sartor Resartus, the essay on Characteristics, and Past and Present will be found to be the best introduction to Carlyle's political and ethical ideas.

THE TEXT OF THE ESSAY ON BURNS

The way in which the manuscript of the Essay on Burns was received by the editor of the Edinburgh Review is an illustration of the rather too well worn dictum that the contemporary critic is not always the best judge of a creation of genius. Jeffrey thought the article long and diffuse. Though he admitted that "it contained much beauty and fitness of diction," he insisted that it must be cut down to perhaps half its dimensions. Consequently when the proof-sheets finally reached the author himself, a good deal of the Essay was missing. Carlyle found "the first part cut all into shreds — the body of a quadruped with the head of a bird, a man shortened by cutting out his thighs and fixing the knee-caps on the hips." He refused to let it appear "in such a horrid shape." Replacing the most important passages, he returned the sheets with an intimation that the article might be withheld altogether, but should not be mutilated. Fortunately for the readers of the Review, Jeffrey acquiesced and caused the article to be printed in very nearly its original form.[1]

[1] The following passages do not appear in the form the article finally took in the Edinburgh Review: pp. 28–31, "Of this last excellence, . . . I'll nae mair trouble them nor thee, O";

In 1839 Carlyle's most important articles w lected and republished in four volumes, entitle cal and Miscellaneous Essays. Among these Essay on Burns. The revisions made by in preparing the Essay for republication exceptional interest. They afford glimpses i literary workshop, and permit us to see how dled his tools, — not those, to be sure, which a in blocking out and executing the main body work, but those of finer edge and temper whic to bring out the more subtle shades of mea to point a keener emphasis. A list of some revised passages, printed side by side with th nal versions, is given below. After the stud read the Essay, and has seen into its larger structure, and has learned to keep step w swing and onward movement of the style, it w him to turn his attention back to some of the points of workmanship. Just why was this pa change made by Carlyle? In just what way w sentence improved as to its clearness, strengt rence, or eternal fitness? In order to answ questions as these, it will be found necessary i pp. 38–39, "But has it not been said, . . . Baited witl deadly curse!"; and p. 45, "Apart from the universal s with man . . . not without significance."

y case to consider the passage with reference to ontext, — sometimes with reference to the whole graph or section, — and thus, even in small things, rganic character of the style will be made manifest.

ORIGINAL AND REVISED VERSIONS

INAL VERSIONS IN HE EDINBURGH REVIEW	REVISED VERSIONS
r own contributions to it, re aware, can be but y and feeble; but we them with good-will, and that they may meet with tance from those for ı they are intended (p.	Our own contributions to it, we are aware, can be but scanty and feeble; but we offer them with good-will, and trust that they may meet with acceptance from those they are intended for (p. 7).
ıquerors are a race with ı the world could well ıse (p. 272).	Conquerors are a class of men with whom, for the most part, the world could well dispense (p. 11).
ːs necessary, however, to on, that it is to the Poetry ırns that we now allude, p. 276).	Here, however, let us say, it is to the Poetry of Burns that we now allude, etc. (p. 20).

it is in some past, distant, conventional world, that poetry resides for him, etc. (p. 277).

it is in some past, d conventional heroic worl poetry resides, etc. (p. 2

The poet, we cannot but think, can never have far to seek for a subject, etc. (p. 277).

The poet, we imagir never have far to seek subject, etc. (p. 23).

Without eyes, indeed, the task might be hard (p. 278).

Without eyesight, i the task might be hard blind or the purblind 'travels from Dan to sheba, and finds it all b (p. 25).

We see in him the gentleness, the trembling pity of a woman, with the deep earnestness, the force and passionate ardor of a hero (p. 279).

We see that in thi there was the gentlene trembling pity of a w with the deep earnestne force and passionate ar a hero (p. 27).

And observe with what a prompt and eager force he grasps his subject, be it what it may! (p. 279.)

And observe with v fierce prompt force he his subject, be it what i (p. 28.)

Poetry, except in such cases as that of Keats, where the whole consists in extreme sensibility, and a certain vague pervading tunefulness of na-

Poetry, except in such as that of Keats, whe whole consists in a wee maudlin sensibility, and tain vague random tune ture, is no separate faculty, no organ which can be superadded to the rest, or disjoined from them; but rather the result of their general harmony and completion (p. 281).

What Burns's force of understanding may have been, we have less means of judging; it had to dwell among the humblest objects; never saw philosophy; never rose, except for short intervals, into the region of great ideas. Nevertheless, sufficient indication remains for us in his works, etc. (p. 282).

Under a lighter and thinner disguise, etc. (p. 284)

and thus the Tragedy of the adventure becomes a mere drunken phantasmagoria, painted on ale-vapors, and the Farce alone has any reality (p. 285).

The Song has its rules equally with Tragedy (p. 286).

of nature, is no separate faculty, no organ which can be superadded to the rest, or disjoined from them; but rather the result of their general harmony and completion (p. 33).

What Burns's force of understanding may have been, we have less means of judging: it had to dwell among the humblest objects; never saw Philosophy; never rose, except by natural effort and for short intervals, into the region of great ideas. Nevertheless, sufficient indication, if no proof sufficient, remains for us in his works, etc. (p. 33).

Under a lighter disguise, etc. (p. 41).

and thus the Tragedy of the adventure becomes a mere drunken phantasmagoria, or many colored spectrum painted on ale-vapors, and the Farce alone has any reality (p. 43).

Yet the Song has its rules equally with Tragedy, etc. (p. 46).

In hut and hall, as the heart unfolds itself in the joy and woe of existence, etc. (p. 287).	In hut and hall, as the heart unfolds itself in many colored joy and woe of existence, etc. (p. 49).
In his most toilsome journeyings, this object never quits him, etc. (p. 289).	In his toilsome journeyings, this object never quits him, etc. (p. 53).
But to leave the mere literary character of Burns, which has already detained us too long, we cannot but think that the Life he willed, and was fated to lead among his fellow men, is both more interesting and instructive than any of his written works (p. 290).	But to leave the mere literary character of Burns, which has already detained us too long. Far more interesting than any of his written works, as it appears to us, are his acted ones: the Life he willed and was fated to lead among his fellow-men (p. 54).
Thus, like a young man, he cannot steady himself for any fixed or systematic pursuit, but swerves to and fro, between passionate hope, and remorseful disappointment, etc. (p. 291).	Thus, like a young man, he cannot gird himself up for any worthy well-calculated goal, but swerves to and fro, between passionate hope and remorseful disappointment, etc. (p. 56).
Manhood begins when we have in any way made truce with Necessity; begins, at all events, even when we have	Manhood begins when we have in any way made truce with Necessity; begins even when we have surrendered to dered to Necessity, as ost part only do, etc.).

Necessity, as the most part only do, etc. (p. 61).

e of his admirers, indeed, ndalized at his ever re- to gauge; and would ıad him apparently lie the pool, till the spirit ronage should stir the , and then heal with lunge all his worldly s! We fear that such llors knew but little of ; and did not consider appiness might in all e cheaply had by waiting e fulfilment of golden , were it not that in the ı the dreamer must die ger (p. 298).

Certain of his admirers have felt scandalized at his ever resolving to gauge; and would have had him lie at the pool, till the spirit of Patronage stirred the waters, that so, with one friendly plunge, all his sorrows might be healed. Unwise counsellors! They know not the manner of this spirit; and how, in the lap of most golden dreams, a man might have happiness, were it not that in the interim he must die of hunger! (p. 73.)

yet he sailed a sea, without some such guide was no right steering).

And yet he sailed a sea, where without some such loadstar there was no right steering (p. 77).

influences of that age, n, kind, susceptible na- o say nothing of his untoward situation, t more than usually dif-

The influences of that age, his open, kind, susceptible nature, to say nothing of his highly untoward situation, made it more than usually difficult for him to repel or resist; the better spirit that was in him ever sternly demanded its rights, its supremacy : he spent his life in endeavoring to reconcile these two ; and lost it, as he must have lost it, without reconciling them here (p. 306).

Granted, the ship comes into harbor with shrouds and tackle damaged ; and the pilot is therefore blameworthy ; for he has not been all-wise and all-powerful ; but to know how blameworthy, tell us first whether his voyage has been round the Globe, or only to Ramsgate and the Isle of Dogs (p. 311).

ficult for him to cast as rightly subordinate ; the spirit that was within hi sternly demanded its its supremacy: he spe life in endeavoring to cile these two ; and lost he must lose it, without ciling them (p. 90).

Granted, the ship com harbor with shrouds tackle damaged ; the p blameworthy ; he has no all-wise and all-powerfu to know how blameworth us first whether his voya been round the Globe, o to Ramsgate and the I Dogs (p. 101).

APPRECIATIONS

It is admirable in Carlyle that, in his judgme our German authors, he has especially in view mental and moral core as that which is really i ential. Carlyle is a moral force of great import There is in him much for the future, and we ca foresee what he will produce and effect. — GOETHE: Conversations of Goethe with Eckermann and Scott. (July 25, 1827, — a year before the Essay on Burns was written.) Translated by John Oxenford. London, 1874. p. 276.

There is no philosophy here for philosophers, only as every man is said to have his philosophy. No system but such as is the man himself; and, indeed, he stands compactly enough; no progress beyond the first assertion and challenge, as it were, with trumpet blast. One thing is certain, — that we had best be doing something in good earnest henceforth forever; that's an indispensable philosophy. The before impossible precept, 'know thyself,' he translates into the partially possible one, 'know what thou canst work at.' — THOREAU: Thomas Carlyle and His Works. A Yankee in Canada. p. 240. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

I did not, however, deem myself a competent judge of Carlyle. I felt that he was a poet, and that I was not; that he was a man of intuition, which I was not; and that as such, he not only saw many things long before me, which I could only when they were pointed out to me, hobble after and prove, but that it was highly probable he could see many things which were not visible to me even after they were pointed out. I knew that I could not see round him, and could never be certain that I saw over him; and I never presumed to judge him with any definiteness, until he was interpreted to me by one greatly the superior of us both — who was more of a poet than he, and more of a thinker than I — whose own mind and nature included his, and infinitely more. — JOHN STUART MILL: Autobiography.

He did not believe in democracy, in popular sovereignty, in the progress of the species, in the political equality of Jesus and Judas: in fact, he repudiated with mingled wrath and sorrow the whole American idea and theory of politics; yet who shall say that his central doctrine of the survival of the fittest, the nobility of labor, the exaltation of justice, valor, pity, the leadership of character, truth, nobility, wisdom, etc., is really and finally inconsistent with, or inimical to, that which is valuable and permanent and formative in the modern movement? I think it is the best medicine and regimen for it that could be suggested — the best stay and counterweight. For the making of good Democrats, there are no books like Carlyle's, and we in America need especially to cherish him, and to lay his lesson to heart. — JOHN BURROUGHS: Fresh Fields, p. 281. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

One of Mr. Carlyle's chief and just glories is, that for more than forty years he has clearly seen, and kept constantly and conspicuously in his own sight and that of his readers, the profoundly important crisis in the midst of which we are living. The moral and social dissolution in progress about us, and the enormous peril of sailing blindfold and haphazard, without rudder or compass or chart, have always been fully visible to him, and it is no fault of his if they have not become equally plain to his contemporaries. The policy of drifting has had no countenance from him. — MORLEY: Carlyle. In Critical Miscellanies, London, 1871. (Chapman and Hall.)

It is not the intellect alone, or the imagination alone, which can become sensible of the highest virtue in the writings of Mr. Carlyle. He is before all else a power with reference to conduct. He too cannot live without a divine presence. He finds it in the entire material universe, "the living garment of God." Teufelsdröckh among the Alps is first awakened from his stony sleep at the "Centre of Indifference" by the glory of the white mountains, the azure dome, the azure winds, the black tempest marching in anger through the distance. He finds the divine presence in the spirit of man, and in the heroic leaders of our race. — DOWDEN: Studies in Literature, p. 74. London, 1878. (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.)

In Switzerland I live in the immediate presence of a mountain, noble alike in form and mass. A bucket or two of water, whipped into a cloud, can obscure, if not efface, that lordly peak. You would almost say that no peak could be there. But the cloud passes away, and the mountain, in its solid grandeur, remains. Thus, when all temporary dust is laid, will stand out, erect and clear, the massive figure of Carlyle. — TYNDALL: On Unveiling of the Statue to Thomas Carlyle. New Fragments of Science, p. 397. (D. Appleton & Co.)

Though not the safest of guides in politics or practical philosophy, his value as an inspirer and awakener cannot be over-estimated. It is a power which belongs only to the highest order of minds, for it is none but a divine fire that can so kindle and irradiate. The debt due him from those who listened to the teachings of his prime for revealing to them what sublime reserves of power even the humblest may find in manliness, sincerity, and self-reliance, can be paid with nothing short of reverential gratitude. As a purifier of the sources whence our intellectual inspiration is drawn, his influence has been second only to that of Wordsworth, if even to his. Indeed he has been in no fanciful sense the continuator of Wordsworth's moral teaching. — LOWELL: Carlyle. Literary Essays, Vol. II., p. 118. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

Carlyle, therefore, must be judged as a poet, and not as a dealer in philosophic systems; as a seer or a prophet, not as a theorist or a man of calculations. And, therefore, if I were attempting any criticism of his literary merits, I should dwell upon his surpassing power in his peculiar province. Admitting that every line he wrote has the stamp of his idiosyncrasies, and consequently requires a certain congeniality of temperament in the reader, I should try to describe the strange spell which it exercises over the initiated. If you really hate the grotesque, the gloomy, the exaggerated, you are of course disqualified from enjoying Carlyle. You must take leave of what ordinarily passes even for common-sense, of all academical canons of taste, and of any weak regard for symmetry or simplicity before you enter the charmed circle. But if you can get rid of your prejudices for the nonce, you will certainly be rewarded by seeing visions such as are evoked by no other magician. The common-sense reappears in the new shape of strange vivid flashes of humor and insight casting undisputed gleams of light into many dark places; and dashing off graphic portraits with a single touch. And if you miss the serene atmosphere of calmer forms of art, it is something to feel at times, as no one but Carlyle can make you feel, that each instant is the "conflux of two eternities"; that our little lives, in his favorite Shakespearian phrase, are "rounded with a sleep"; that history is like the short space lighted up by a flickering taper in the midst of infinite glooms and mysteries, and its greatest events brief scenes in a vast drama of conflicting forces, where the actors are passing in rapid succession — rising from and vanishing into the all-embracing darkness. — LESLIE STEPHEN: Carlyle's Ethics. Hours in a Library.

REFERENCES ON CARLYLE

[Note: The asterisk denotes those which are recommended to be read first.]

Biography

FROUDE, J. A. Thomas Carlyle. A History of the First Forty Years of his Life. 2 vols. London, 1882. Also, Thomas Carlyle. A History of his Life in London. 2 vols. London, 1885. (Froude was appointed by Carlyle to be his biographer and literary executor.)

*GARNETT, RICHARD. Life of Thomas Carlyle. Great Writers Series. Bibliography by John P. Anderson.

MACPHERSON, H. C. Thomas Carlyle. Famous Scots Series.

NICHOL, JOHN. Thomas Carlyle. English Men of Letters Series.

*NICHOLL, H. J. Thomas Carlyle. Edinburgh, 1881.

Criticism and Personal Recollections

*ARNOLD, MATTHEW. Discourses in America. London, 1885. Emerson [and Carlyle], pp. 138–207. (Should be read in connection with the Correspondence of Emerson and Carlyle.) Cf. BURROUGHS (op. cit.).

BAYNE, PETER. Lessons from My Masters, Carlyle, Tennyson, and Ruskin. London, 1879.

BIRRELL, A. Obiter Dicta, First Series. London, 1884. pp. 1–54.

BLUNT, REGINALD. The Carlyles' Chelsea Home. London, 1895. (Contains many interesting illustrations.)

BOLTON, SARAH K. Famous English Authors of the Nineteenth Century. New York, 1890. Thomas Carlyle.

BROWNING, ELIZABETH BARRETT. On Carlyle. Poet Lore, Vol. X., pp. 612–618. (1898.)

BURROUGHS, JOHN. Fresh Fields. Boston, 1885. A Sunday in Cheyne Row. (Describes a meeting with Carlyle in 1871.) In Carlyle's Country. Indoor Studies. Boston, 1889. Arnold's View of Carlyle and Emerson. (Cf. ARNOLD (op. cit.). For the same articles, see Century, Vol. 26, pp. 530–543, and Vol. 27, pp. 925–932, and Atlantic Monthly, Vol. 51, pp. 320–330. All of the articles are illuminating.)

CAIRD, EDWARD. Essays on Literature and Philosophy. New York, 1892. The Genius of Carlyle.

CONWAY, M. D. Thomas Carlyle. New York, 1881. (Rich in reminiscences of the personality of Carlyle. Contains an interesting autobiography of Carlyle, reported from a conversation).

DAWSON, G. Biographical Lectures. London, 1886. The Genius and Works of Thomas Carlyle. pp. 358–437.

DOWDEN, EDWARD. Studies in Literature. London, 1878. The Transcendental Movement. (Develops the idea that what Coleridge was to the intellect of his time; Wordsworth, to the imagination and to the contemplative habit of mind; Shelley, to the imagination and passions; Carlyle was to the will.)

DUFFY, CHARLES G. Conversations with Carlyle. London, 1892

*Emerson, Ralph Waldo. Impressions of Carlyle. Scribner's, May, 1881. English Traits. (Chapter I. contains an interesting account of his visit to Carlyle at Craigenputtock.)

Espinasse, Francis. Literary Recollections and Sketches. New York, 1893. (A considerable portion of the book is devoted to an interesting account of "The Carlyles and a Segment of Their Circle.") For a characterization of Espinasse by Carlyle, see Duffy (op. cit.), p. 131.

Gilchrist, H. H. Annie Gilchrist: Her Life and Writings. Edited by H. H. C. London, 1887. (Contains reminiscences of Carlyle at Chelsea.)

Harrison, Frederic. Studies in Early Victorian Literature. London, 1895. Thomas Carlyle. Same essay in Forum, Vol. 17, pp. 537–550. (In this will be found a clearly stated adverse criticism of Carlyle.)

*Higginson, T. W. The Laugh of Carlyle. Atlantic Monthly, Vol. 48, pp. 463–466.

Howe, Julia Ward. A Meeting with Carlyle. Critic, Vol. I., p. 89. Reprinted in Reminiscences, 1819–1899. Boston, 1899.

Hunt, Leigh. Autobiography. 3 vols. New York, 1850. Vol. II., chap. xxiv., pp. 266–269. (Reminiscences concerning Carlyle's hatred of shams, habit of fault-finding, and paramount humanity.)

Hutton, Laurence. Literary Landmarks of London. Boston, 1885. Thomas Carlyle. pp. 38–40. (Chiefly quotations from Froude's biography.)

Hutton, R. H. Criticisms on Contemporary Thought and Thinkers. London, 1894. By the same author, Essays on Some of the Modern Guides to Thought in Matters of Faith. London, 1887. (Both works contain interesting though somewhat contradictory estimates of Carlyle's work.)

*JAMES, HENRY, SR. The Literary Remains of the Late Henry James. Some personal recollections of Carlyle. pp. 421–468. Reprinted from Atlantic Monthly, Vol. 47, pp. 593–609. (An exceedingly interesting article.)

LARKIN, HENRY. Carlyle and the Open Secret of His Life. London, 1886. (Asserts that Carlyle entertained hopes of being actively employed in public life, of leading great social and political reforms, — hopes that were thwarted by the death of Sir Robert Peel.)

*LORD, JOHN. Beacon Lights of History. New York, 1896. Thomas Carlyle. Criticisms and Biography. (Contains a brief review of Carlyle's principal writings.)

*LOWELL, J. R. Literary Essays, Vol. II. Carlyle. (1866.) See also Fable for Critics.

MARTINEAU, JAMES. Essays Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. New York, 1879. Vol. I., pp. 329–405. (A philosophical discussion of the personal influences on our present theology of Newman, Coleridge, and Carlyle.)

*MASSON, DAVID. Carlyle Personally and in His Writings. Two Edinburgh Lectures. London, 1885. (An important criticism of Froude's biography.) By the same author, Edinburgh Sketches and Memories. London, 1892. Carlyle's Edinburgh Life.

*MAZZINI, JOSEPH. Essays. London, 1887. On the Genius and Tendency of the Writings of Thomas Carlyle. (First published in the British and Foreign Review, October, 1843. It still remains one of the best statements and criticisms of Carlyle's ethics.)

MEAD, EDWIN D. The Philosophy of Carlyle. Boston, 1881.

*MINTO, WILLIAM. A Manual of English Prose Literature.

Edinburgh, 1886. Thomas Carlyle. pp. 131–180. (Contains a valuable analysis of Carlyle's style.)

*MORLEY, JOHN. Critical Miscellanies. London, 1871. Carlyle.

OLIPHANT, MRS. M. W. Macmillan's Magazine, Vol. 43, pp. 482–496. (Personal recollections of Carlyle in his old age.)

PARTON, JAMES (ED.) Some Noted Princes, Authors, and Statesmen of Our Time. New York, 1885. Tea with Carlyle. Anon. Thomas Carlyle, by the editor. Carlyle: His Work and His Wife, by Louise Chandler Moulton. (Written in a popular, entertaining style.)

RUSKIN, JOHN. Fors Clavigera. London, 1871–1884. (Passim.)

*SAINTSBURY, GEORGE. Literary Work of Carlyle. Century, Vol. 22, pp. 92–106.

*SCHERER, EDMOND. Essays on English Literature. Translated by George Saintsbury. New York, 1891. Thomas Carlyle.

SEELEY, J. R. Lectures and Essays. London, 1870. (In the essay on Milton's Political Opinions, Milton as "the prophet of national health" is contrasted with Carlyle as "the prophet of national decay.")

*SHAIRP, J. C. Aspects of Poetry. Boston, 1882. Prose Poets: Thomas Carlyle. (See also the essay on Cardinal Newman for a significant contrast between the style and thought of Carlyle and that of Newman.)

*STEPHEN, LESLIE. Hours in a Library. 3 vols. London, 1892. Carlyle's Ethics. (Same essay in the Cornhill Magazine, Vol. 44, pp. 664–683.)

THAYER, W. R. Throne Makers. Boston, 1899. Carlyle. (First printed in the Forum, Vol. 20, pp. 465–479. A eulogy of Carlyle as a moralist and historian.)

*THOREAU, H. D. A Yankee in Canada. Boston, 1878.

Thomas Carlyle and His Works. (Reprinted from Graham's Magazine, March, 1847. One of the richest and most suggestive criticisms of Carlyle.)

TYNDALL, JOHN. New Fragments. New York, 1892. Personal Recollections of Thomas Carlyle. (Contains an interesting account of Carlyle's Edinburgh Address.) On Unveiling the Statue of Thomas Carlyle.

WHITMAN, WALT. Complete Prose Works. Boston, 1898. Death of Thomas Carlyle. Carlyle from an American Point of View.

WILSON, DAVID. Mr. Froude and Carlyle. New York, 1898. (Marshals the important criticisms of Froude's biography.)

WYLIE, W. H. Thomas Carlyle. The Man and His Books. London, 1881.

Correspondence and Reminiscences

COPELAND, C. T. (ED.) Letters of Thomas Carlyle to his Youngest Sister. Boston, 1899.

FROUDE, J. A. (ED.) Letters and Memorials of Jane Baillie Welsh Carlyle; Prepared for Publication by Thomas Carlyle. New York, 1883. Reminiscences of my Irish Journey in 1849. New York, 1882.

NORTON, C. E. (ED.) Correspondence of Carlyle and Emerson, 1834–1872. 2 vols. Boston, 1883. Supplementary Letters. Boston, 1886. Correspondence of Goethe and Carlyle. London, 1887. Reminiscences. 2 vols. in 1. London, 1887.

BURNS

[Edinburgh Review, No. XCVI. December, 1828]

In the modern arrangements of society, it is no uncommon thing that a man of genius must, like Butler,° 'ask for bread and receive a stone'; for, in spite of our grand maxim of supply and demand, it is by no means the highest excellence that men are most forward to recognize. The inventor of a spinning-jenny° is pretty sure of his reward in his own day; but the writer of a true poem, like the apostle of a true religion, is nearly as sure of the contrary. We do not know whether it is not an aggravation of the injustice, that there is generally a posthumous retribution. Robert Burns, in the course of Nature, might yet have been living; but his short life was spent in toil and penury; and he died, in the prime of his manhood, miserable and neglected: and yet already a brave mausoleum shines over his dust, and more than one splendid monument° has been reared in other places to his fame; the street where he languished in poverty is called by his name; the highest personages in our literature have been proud to appear as his commentators and admirers; and here is the sixth narrative of his Life° that has been given to the world!

Mr. Lockhart° thinks it necessary to apologize for this new attempt on such a subject: but his readers, we believe, will readily acquit him; or, at worst, will censure only the performance of his task, not the choice of it. The character of Burns, indeed, is a theme that cannot easily become either trite or exhausted; and will probably gain rather than lose in its dimensions by the distance to which it is removed by Time. No man, it has been said, is a hero to his valet; and this is probably true; but the fault is at least as likely to be the valet's as the hero's. For it is certain that to the vulgar eye few things are wonderful that are not distant. It is difficult for men to believe that the man, the mere man whom they see, nay, perhaps painfully feel, toiling at their side through the poor jostlings of existence, can be made of finer clay than themselves. Suppose that some dining acquaintance of Sir Thomas Lucy's,° and neighbor of John a Combe's,° had snatched an hour or two from the preservation of his game, and written us a Life of Shakespeare! What dissertations should we not have had, — not on Hamlet and The Tempest, but on the wool-trade, and deer-stealing, and the libel and vagrant laws; and how the Poacher became a Player; and how Sir Thomas and Mr. John had Christian bowels, and did not push him to extremities! In like manner, we believe, with respect to Burns, that till the companions of his pilgrimage, the Honorable Excise Commissioners,° and the Gentlemen of the Caledonian Hunt,° and the Dumfries Aristocracy, and all the Squires and Earls, equally with the Ayr Writers,° and the New and Old Light Clergy,° whom he had to do with, shall have become invisible in the darkness of the Past, or visible only by light borrowed from his juxtaposition, it will be difficult to measure him by any true standard, or to estimate what he really was and did, in the eighteenth century, for his country and the world. It will be difficult, we say; but still a fair problem for literary historians; and repeated attempts will give us repeated approximations.

His former Biographers have done something, no doubt, but by no means a great deal, to assist us. Dr. Currie° and Mr. Walker,° the principal of these writers, have both, we think, mistaken one essentially important thing: Their own and the world's true relation to their author, and the style in which it be men to think and to speak of such a man.

loved the poet truly; more perhaps than to his readers, or even to himself; yet he e introduces him with a certain patronizing, air; as if the polite public might think it st half unwarrantable that he, a man of science and gentleman, should do such honor to a all this, however, we readily admit that his not want of love, but weakness of faith;
that the first and kindest of all our poet's b should not have seen farther, or believed m what he saw. Mr. Walker offends more de same kind: and both err alike in presenting detached catalogue of his several supposed virtues and vices, instead of a delineation of ing character as a living unity. This, howe painting a portrait; but gauging the length a of the several features, and jotting down th sions in arithmetical ciphers. Nay, it is n as that: for we are yet to learn by what art ments the mind could be so measured and g

Mr. Lockhart, we are happy to say, has av these errors. He uniformly treats Burns a and remarkable man the public voice has nounced him to be: and in delineating him, he has avoided the method of separate generalities, and rather sought for characteristic incidents, habits, actions, sayings; in a word, for aspects which exhibit the whole man, as he looked and lived among his fellows. The book accordingly, with all its deficiencies, gives more insight, we think, into the true character of Burns, than any prior biography: though, being written on the very popular and condensed scheme of an article for Constable's Miscellany,° it has less depth than we could have wished and expected from a writer of such power; and contains rather more, and more multifarious quotations than belong of right to an original production. Indeed, Mr. Lockhart's own writing is generally so good, so clear, direct and nervous, that we seldom wish to see it making place for another man's. However, the spirit of the work is throughout candid, tolerant and anxiously conciliating; compliments and praises are liberally distributed, on all hands, to great and small; and, as Mr. Morris Birkbeck° observes of the society in the backwoods of America, 'the courtesies of polite life are never lost sight of for a moment.' But there are better things than these in the volume; and we can safely testify, not only that it is easily and pleasantly read a to their author, and the style in which it became such men to think and to speak of such a man. Dr. Currie loved the poet truly; more perhaps than he avowed to his readers, or even to himself; yet he everywhere introduces him with a certain patronizing, apologetic air; as if the polite public might think it strange and half unwarrantable that he, a man of science, a scholar and gentleman, should do such honor to a rustic. In all this, however, we readily admit that his fault was not want of love, but weakness of faith; and regret that the first and kindest of all our poet's biographers should not have seen farther, or believed more boldly what he saw. Mr. Walker offends more deeply in the same kind: and both err alike in presenting us with a detached catalogue of his several supposed attributes, virtues and vices, instead of a delineation of the resulting character as a living unity. This, however, is not painting a portrait; but gauging the length and breadth of the several features, and jotting down their dimensions in arithmetical ciphers. Nay, it is not so much as that: for we are yet to learn by what arts or instruments the mind could be so measured and gauged.

Mr. Lockhart, we are happy to say, has avoided both these errors. He uniformly treats Burns as the high and remarkable man the public voice has now pronounced him to be: and in delineating him, he has avoided the method of separate generalities, and rather sought for characteristic incidents, habits, actions, sayings; in a word, for aspects which exhibit the whole man, as he looked and lived among his fellows. The book accordingly, with all its deficiencies, gives more insight, we think, into the true character of Burns, than any prior biography: though, being written on the very popular and condensed scheme of an article for Constable's Miscellany,° it has less depth than we could have wished and expected from a writer of such power; and contains rather more, and more multifarious quotations than belong of right to an original production. Indeed, Mr. Lockhart's own writing is generally so good, so clear, direct and nervous, that we seldom wish to see it making place for another man's. However, the spirit of the work is throughout candid, tolerant and anxiously conciliating; compliments and praises are liberally distributed, on all hands, to great and small; and, as Mr. Morris Birkbeck° observes of the society in the backwoods of America, 'the courtesies of polite life are never lost sight of for a moment.' But there are better things than these in the volume; and we can safely testify, not only that it is easily and pleasantly read a first time, but may even be without difficulty again.

Nevertheless, we are far from thinking that problem of Burns's Biography has yet been adequ solved. We do not allude so much to deficienc facts or documents, — though of these we are every day receiving some fresh accession, — as t limited and imperfect application of them to the end of Biography. Our notions upon this subject perhaps appear extravagant; but if an individu really of consequence enough to have his life character recorded for public remembrance, we always been of opinion that the public ought t made acquainted with all the inward springs and tions of his character. How did the world and n life, from his particular position, represent themse to his mind? How did coexisting circumsta modify him from without; how did he modify t from within? With what endeavors and what effi rule over them; with what resistance and what su ing sink under them? In one word, what and produced was the effect of society on him; what how produced was his effect on society? He should answer these questions, in regard to any vidual, would, as we believe, furnish a model of fection in Biography. Few individuals, indeed, can deserve such a study; and many lives will be written, and, for the gratification of innocent curiosity, ought to be written, and read and forgotten, which are not in this sense biographies. But Burns, if we mistake not, is one of these few individuals; and such a study, at least with such a result, he has not yet obtained. Our own contributions to it, we are aware, can be but scanty and feeble; but we offer them with good-will, and trust they may meet with acceptance from those they are intended for.

Burns first came upon the world as a prodigy; and was, in that character, entertained by it, in the usual fashion, with loud, vague, tumultuous wonder, speedily subsiding into censure and neglect; till his early and most mournful death again awakened an enthusiasm for him, which, especially as there was now nothing to be done, and much to be spoken, has prolonged itself even to our own time. It is true, the 'nine days' have long since elapsed; and the very continuance of this clamor proves that Burns was no vulgar wonder. Accordingly, even in sober judgments, where, as years passed by, he has come to rest more and more exclusively on his own intrinsic merits, and may now be well-nigh shorn of that casual radiance, he appears not only as a true British poet, but as one of the most considerable British men of the eighteenth century. Let it not be objected that he did little. He did much, if we consider where and how. If the work performed was small, we must remember that he had his very materials to discover; for the metal he worked in lay hid under the desert moor where no eye but his had guessed its existence; and we may almost say, that with his own hand he had to construct the tools for fashioning it. For he found himself in deepest obscurity, without help, without instruction, without model; or with models only of the meanest sort. An educated man stands, as it were, in the midst of a boundless arsenal and magazine, filled with all the weapons and engines which man's skill has been able to devise from the earliest time; and he works accordingly, with a strength borrowed from all past ages. How different is his state who stands on the outside of that storehouse, and feels that its gates must be stormed, or remain forever shut against him! His means are the commonest and rudest; the mere work done is no measure of his strength. A dwarf behind his steam-engine may remove mountains; but no dwarf will hew them down with a pickaxe: and he must be a Titan° that hurls them abroad with his arms.

It is in this last shape that Burns presents himself. Born in an age the most prosaic Britain had yet seen, and in a condition the most disadvantageous, where his mind, if it accomplished aught, must accomplish it under the pressure of continual bodily toil, nay, of penury and desponding apprehension of the worst evils, and with no furtherance but such knowledge as dwells in a poor man's hut, and the rhymes of a Ferguson° or Ramsay° for his standard of beauty, he sinks not under all these impediments: through the fogs and darkness of that obscure region, his lynx eye discerns the true relations of the world and human life; he grows into intellectual strength, and trains himself into intellectual expertness. Impelled by the expansive movement of his own irrepressible soul, he struggles forward into the general view; and with haughty modesty lays down before us, as the fruit of his labor, a gift, which Time has now pronounced imperishable. Add to all this, that his darksome drudging childhood and youth was by far the kindliest era of his whole life; and that he died in his thirty-seventh year: and then ask, If it be strange that his poems are imperfect, and of small extent, or that his genius attained no mastery in its art? Alas, his Sun shone as through a tropical tornado; and the pale Shadow of Death eclipsed it at noon! Shrouded in such baleful vapors, the genius of Burns was never seen in clear azure splendor, enlightening the world: but some beams from it did, by fits, pierce through; and it tinted those clouds with rainbow and orient colors into a glory and stern grandeur, which men silently gazed on with wonder and tears!

We are anxious not to exaggerate; for it is exposition rather than admiration that our readers require of us here; and yet to avoid some tendency to that side is no easy matter. We love Burns, and we pity him; and love and pity are prone to magnify. Criticism, it is sometimes thought, should be a cold business; we are not so sure of this; but, at all events, our concern with Burns is not exclusively that of critics. True and genial as his poetry must appear, it is not chiefly as a poet, but as a man, that he interests and affects us. He was often advised to write a tragedy: time and means were not lent him for this; but through life he enacted a tragedy, and one of the deepest. We question whether the world has since witnessed so utterly sad a scene; whether Napoleon himself, left to brawl with Sir Hudson Lowe,° and perish on his rock 'amid the melancholy main,'° presented to the reflecting mind such a 'spectacle of pity and fear' as did this intrinsically nobler, gentler and perhaps greater soul, wasting itself away in a hopeless struggle with base entanglements, which coiled closer and closer round him, till only death opened him an outlet. Conquerors are a class of men with whom, for most part, the world could well dispense; nor can the hard intellect, the unsympathizing loftiness and high but selfish enthusiasm of such persons inspire us in general with any affection; at best it may excite amazement; and their fall, like that of a pyramid, will be beheld with a certain sadness and awe. But a true Poet, a man in whose heart resides some effluence of Wisdom, some tone of the 'Eternal Melodies,' is the most precious gift that can be bestowed on a generation: we see in him a freer, purer development of whatever is noblest in ourselves; his life is a rich lesson to us; and we mourn his death as that of a benefactor who loved and taught us.

¶ Such a gift had Nature, in her bounty, bestowed on us in Robert Burns; but with queenlike indifference she cast it from her hand, like a thing of no moment; and it was defaced and torn asunder, as an idle bauble, before we recognized it. To the ill-starred Burns was given the power of making man's life more venerable,

but that of wisely guiding his own life was not gi Destiny,—for so in our ignorance we must speal his faults, the faults of others, proved too hard him; and that spirit which might have soared cou but have walked, soon sank to the dust, its gloi faculties trodden under foot in the blossom; and we may almost say, without ever having lived.
so kind and warm a soul; so full of inborn riche love to all living and lifeless things! How his h flows out in sympathy over universal Nature; an her bleakest provinces discerns a beauty and a m ing! The 'Daisy'° falls not unheeded under ploughshare; nor the ruined nest of that 'wee, co ing, timorous beastie,'° cast forth, after all its p dent pains, to 'thole° the sleety dribble° and cranre cauld.' The 'hoar visage' of Winter° delights l he dwells with a sad and oft-returning fondnes these scenes of solemn desolation; but the voic the tempest becomes an anthem to his ears; he l to walk in the sounding woods, 'it raises his thoug to Him that walketh on the wings of the wind.' A Poet-soul, for it needs but to be struck, and the sc it yields will be music! But observe him chiefl he mingles with his brother men. What warm, comprehending fellow-feeling; what trustful, bo

ıss love; what generous exaggeration of the object ›ved! His rustic friend, his nut-brown maiden, are o longer mean and homely, but a hero and a queen, 'hom he prizes as the paragons of Earth. The rough ›enes of Scottish life, not seen by him in any Arca- ian illusion,° but in the rude contradiction, in the noke and soil of a too harsh reality, are still lovely › him: Poverty is indeed his companion, but Love lso, and Courage; the simple feelings, the worth, the obleness, that dwell under the straw roof, are dear nd venerable to his heart: and thus over the lowest rovinces of man's existence he pours the glory of his wn soul; and they rise, in shadow and sunshine, ›ftened and brightened into a beauty which other ves discern not in the highest. He has a just self- ›nsciousness, which too often degenerates into pride; et it is a noble pride, for defence, not for offence; no ›ld suspicious feeling, but a frank and social one. he Peasant Poet bears himself, we might say, like a ing in exile: he is cast among the low, and feels imself equal to the highest; yet he claims no rank, iat none may be disputed to him. The forward he n repel, the supercilious he can subdue; pretensions ! wealth or ancestry are of no avail with him; there a fire in that dark eye, under which the 'insolence of condescension' cannot thrive. In his abasen in his extreme need, he forgets not for a momen majesty of Poetry and Manhood. [And yet, fa he feels himself above common men, he wander apart from them, but mixes warmly in their inter nay, throws himself into their arms, and, as it v entreats them to love him.] It is moving to see in his darkest despondency, this proud being seeks relief from friendship; unbosoms himself, c to the unworthy; and, amid tears, strains to his g ing heart a heart that knows only the name of fri ship. And yet he was 'quick to learn'; a man of vision, before whom common disguises afforded no cealment. His understanding saw through the hol ness even of accomplished deceivers; but there w generous credulity in his heart. And so did Peasant show himself among us; 'a soul like Æolian harp, in whose strings the vulgar wind, passed through them, changed itself into articu melody.' And this was he for whom the world fo no fitter business than quarrelling with smugglers vintners, computing excise-dues upon tallow, and g ing ale-barrels! In such toils was that mighty S sorrowfully wasted: and a hundred years may pas before another such is given us to waste.

All that remains of Burns, the Writings he has left, seem to us, as we hinted above, no more than a poor mutilated fraction of what was in him; brief, broken glimpses of a genius that could never show itself complete; that wanted all things for completeness: culture, leisure, true effort, nay, even length of life. His poems are, with scarcely any exception, mere occasional effusions; poured forth with little premeditation; expressing, by such means as offered, the passion, opinion, or humor of the hour. Never in one instance was it permitted him to grapple with any subject with the full collection of his strength, to fuse and mould it in the concentrated fire of his genius. To try by the strict rules of Art such imperfect fragments, would be at once unprofitable and unfair. Nevertheless, there is something in these poems, marred and defective as they are, which forbids the most fastidious student of poetry to pass them by. Some sort of enduring quality they must have: for after fifty years of the wildest vicissitudes in poetic taste, they still continue to be read; nay, are read more and more eagerly, more and more extensively; and this not only by literary virtuosos, and that class upon whom transitory causes operate most strongly, but by all classes, down to the most hard, unlettered and truly natural class, who read little, and especially no poetry, except because they find pleasure in it. The grounds of so singular and wide a popularity, which extends, in a literal sense, from the palace to the hut, and over all regions where the English tongue is spoken, are well worth inquiring into. After every just deduction, it seems to imply some rare excellence in these works. What is that excellence?

To answer this question will not lead us far. The excellence of Burns is, indeed, among the rarest, whether in poetry or prose; but, at the same time, it is plain and easily recognized: his Sincerity, his indisputable air of Truth. Here are no fabulous woes or joys; no hollow fantastic sentimentalities; no wire-drawn refinings, either in thought or feeling: the passion that is traced before us has glowed in a living heart; the opinion he utters has risen in his own understanding, and been a light to his own steps. He does not write from hearsay, but from sight and experience; it is the scenes that he has lived and labored amidst, that he describes: those scenes, rude and humble as they are, have kindled beautiful emotions in his soul, noble thoughts, and definite resolves; and he speaks forth what is in him, not from any outward call of vanity or interest, but because his heart is too full to be silent. He speaks it with such melody and modulation as he can; 'in homely rustic jingle'; but it is his own, and genuine. This is the grand secret for finding readers and retaining them: let him who would move and convince others, be first moved and convinced himself. Horace's rule, Si vis me flere,° is applicable in a wider sense than the literal one. To every poet, to every writer, we might say: Be true, if you would be believed. Let a man but speak forth with genuine earnestness the thought, the emotion, the actual condition of his own heart; and other men, so strangely are we all knit together by the tie of sympathy, must and will give heed to him. In culture, in extent of view, we may stand above the speaker, or below him; but in either case, his words, if they are earnest and sincere, will find some response within us; for in spite of all casual varieties in outward rank or inward, as face answers to face, so does the heart of man to man.

This may appear a very simple principle, and one which Burns had little merit in discovering. True, the discovery is easy enough: but the practical appliance is not easy; is indeed the fundamental difficulty which all poets have to strive with, and which scarcely one in the hundred ever fairly surmounts. A head too dull to discriminate the true from the false; a heart too dull to love the one at all risks, and to hate the other in spite of all temptations, are alike fatal to a writer. With either, or as more commonly happens, with both of these deficiencies combine a love of distinction, a wish to be original, which is seldom wanting, and we have Affectation, the bane of literature, as Cant, its elder brother, is of morals. How often does the one and the other front us, in poetry, as in life! Great poets themselves are not always free of this vice; nay, it is precisely on a certain sort and degree of greatness that it is most commonly ingrafted. A strong effort after excellence will sometimes solace itself with a mere shadow of success [he who has much to unfold, will sometimes unfold it imperfectly.] Byron, for instance, was no common man: yet if we examine his poetry with this view, we shall find it far enough from faultless. Generally speaking, we should say that it is not true. He refreshes us, not with the divine fountain, but too often with vulgar strong waters, stimulating indeed to the taste, but soon ending in dislike, or even nausea. Are his Haroolds and Giaours, we would ask, real men; we mean, poetically consistent and conceivable men? Do not these characters, does not the character of their author, which more or less shines through them all, rather appear a thing put on for the occasion; no natural or possible mode of being, but something intended to look much grander than nature? Surely, all these stormful agonies, this volcanic heroism, superhuman contempt and moody desperation, with so much scowling, and teeth-gnashing, and other sulphurous humor, is more like the brawling of a player in some paltry tragedy, which is to last three hours, than the bearing of a man in the business of life, which is to last three-score and ten years. To our minds, there is a taint of this sort, something which we should call theatrical, false, affected, in every one of these otherwise so powerful pieces. Perhaps Don Juan, especially the latter parts of it, is the only thing approaching to a sincere work, he ever wrote; the only work where he showed himself, in any measure, as he was; and seemed so intent on his subject as, for moments, to forget himself. Yet Byron hated this vice; we believe, heartily detested it: nay, he had declared formal war against it in words. So difficult is it even for the strongest to make this primary attainment, which might seem the simplest of all: to read its own consciousness without mistakes, without errors involuntary or wilful! We recollect no poet of Burns's susceptibility who comes before us from the first, and abides with the last, with such a total want of affectation. an honest man, and an honest writer. In his suc and his failures, in his greatness and his littlene is ever clear, simple, true, and glitters with no but his own. We reckon this to be a great virt be, in fact, the root of most other virtues, liter well as moral.

Here, however, let us say, it is to the Poe Burns that we now allude; to those writings he had time to meditate, and where no special existed to warp his critical feeling, or obstru endeavor to fulfil it. Certain of his Letter other fractions of prose composition, by no deserve this praise. Here, doubtless, there the same natural truth of style; but on th trary, something not only stiff, but strained twisted; a certain highflown inflated tone; the ing emphasis of which contrasts ill with the fir and rugged simplicity of even his poorest Thus no man, it would appear, is altogether fected. Does not Shakespeare himself sometim meditate the sheerest bombast! But even with to these Letters of Burns, it is but fair to stat he had two excuses. The first was his compa deficiency in language. Burns, though for the most part he writes with singular force, and even gracefulness, is not master of English prose, as he is of Scottish verse; not master of it, we mean, in proportion to the depth and vehemence of his matter. These Letters strike us as the effort of a man to express something which he has no organ fit for expressing. But a second and weightier excuse is to be found in the peculiarity of Burns's social rank. His correspondents are often men whose relation to him he has never accurately ascertained; whom therefore he is either forearming himself against, or else unconsciously flattering, by adopting the style he thinks will please them. At all events, we should remember that these faults, even in his Letters, are not the rule, but the exception. Whenever he writes, as one would ever wish to do, to trusted friends and on real interests, his style becomes simple, vigorous, expressive, sometimes even beautiful. His letters to Mrs. Dunlop° are uniformly excellent.

But we return to his Poetry. In addition to its Sincerity, it has another peculiar merit, which indeed is but a mode, or perhaps a means, of the foregoing: this displays itself in his choice of subjects; or rather in his indifference as to subjects, and the power he has of making all subjects interesting. The ordinary poet, like the ordinary man, is forever seeking in external circumstances the help which can be found only in himself. In what is familiar and near at hand he discerns no form or comeliness: home is not poetical, but prosaic; it is in some past, distant, conventional heroic world, that poetry resides; were he there and not here, were he thus and not so, it would be well with him. Hence our innumerable host of rose colored Novels and iron-mailed Epics, with their locality not on the Earth, but somewhere nearer to the Moon. Hence our Virgins of the Sun,° and our Knights of the Cross, malicious Saracens in turbans and copper-colored Chiefs in wampum, and so many other truculent figures from the heroic times or the heroic climates, who on all hands swarm in our poetry. Peace be with them! But yet, as a great moralist proposed preaching to the men of this century, so would we fain preach to the poets, 'a sermon on the duty of staying at home.' Let them be sure that heroic ages and heroic climates can do little for them. That form of life has attraction for us, less because it is better or nobler than our own, than simply because it is different; and even this attraction must be of the most transient sort. For will not our own age, one day, be an ancient one; and have as quaint a costume as the rest; not contrasted with the rest, therefore, but ranked along with them, in respect of quaintness? Does Homer interest us now, because he wrote of what passed beyond his native Greece, and two centuries before he was born; or because he wrote what passed in God's world, and in the heart of man, which is the same after thirty centuries? Let our poets look to this: is their feeling really finer, truer, and their vision deeper than that of other men, — they have nothing to fear, even from the humblest subject; is it not so, — they have nothing to hope, but an ephemeral favor, even from the highest.

The poet, we imagine, can never have far to seek for a subject: the elements of his art are in him, and around him on every hand; for him the Ideal world is not remote from the Actual, but under it and within it: nay, he is a poet, precisely because he can discern it there. Wherever there is a sky above him, and a world around him, the poet is in his place; for here too is man's existence, with its infinite longings and small acquirings; its ever-thwarted, ever-renewed endeavors; its unspeakable aspirations, its fears and hopes that wander through Eternity; and all the mystery of brightness and of gloom that it was ever made of, in any age or climate, since man first began to live. Is there not the fifth act of a Tragedy in every death-bed, though it were a peasant's, and a bed of heath? And are wooings and weddings obsolete, that there can be Comedy no longer? Or are men suddenly grown wise, that Laughter must no longer shake his sides, but be cheated of his Farce? Man's life and nature is, as it was, and as it will ever be. But the poet must have an eye to read these things, and a heart to understand them; or they come and pass away before him in vain. He is a vates,° a seer; a gift of vision has been given him. Has life no meanings for him, which another cannot equally decipher; then he is no poet, and Delphi itself will not make him one.

In this respect, Burns, though not perhaps absolutely a great poet, better manifests his capability, better proves the truth of his genius, than if he had, by his own strength, kept the whole Minerva Press° going, to the end of his literary course. He shows himself at least a poet of Nature's own making; and Nature, after all, is still the grand agent in making poets. We often hear of this and the other external condition being requisite for the existence of a poet

Sometimes it is a certain sort of training; he must have studied certain things, studied for instance 'the elder dramatists,' and so learned a poetic language; as if poetry lay in the tongue, not in the heart. At other times we are told he must be bred in a certain rank, and must be on a confidential footing with the higher classes; because, above all things, he must see the world. As to seeing the world, we apprehend this will cause him little difficulty, if he have but eyesight to see it with. Without eyesight, indeed, the task might be hard. The blind or the purblind man 'travels from Dan to Beersheba, and finds it all barren.' But happily every poet is born in the world; and sees it, with or against his will, every day and every hour he lives. The mysterious workmanship of man's heart, the true light and the inscrutable darkness of man's destiny, reveal themselves not only in capital cities and crowded saloons, but in every hut and hamlet where men have their abode. Nay, do not the elements of all human virtues and all human vices; the passions at once of a Borgia and of a Luther, lie written, in stronger or fainter lines, in the consciousness of every individual bosom, that has practised honest self-examination? Truly, this same world may be seen in Mossgiel° and Tarbolton.°

if we look well, as clearly as it ever came to light in Crockford's,° or the Tuileries° itself.

But sometimes still harder requisitions are laid on the poor aspirant to poetry; for it is hinted that he should have been born two centuries ago;° inasmuch as poetry, about that date, vanished from the earth, and became no longer attainable by men! Such cobweb speculations have, now and then, overhung the field of literature; but they obstruct not the growth of any plant there: the Shakespeare or the Burns, unconsciously and merely as he walks onward, silently brushes them away. Is not every genius an impossibility till he appear? Why do we call him new and original, if we saw where his marble was lying, and what fabric he could rear from it? It is not the material but the workman that is wanting. It is not the dark place that hinders, but the dim eye. A Scottish peasant's life was the meanest and rudest of all lives, till Burns became a poet in it, and a poet of it; found it a man's life, and therefore significant to men. A thousand battle-fields remain unsung; but the Wounded Hare has not perished without its memorial; a balm of mercy yet breathes on us from its dumb agonies, because a poet was there. Our Hallowe'en had passed and repassed, in rude awe and laughter, since the era of the Druids; but no Theocritus, till Burns, discerned in it the materials of a Scottish Idyl: neither was the Holy Fair any Council of Trent or Roman Jubilee; but nevertheless, Superstition and Hypocrisy and Fun having been propitious to him, in this man's hand it became a poem, instinct with satire and genuine comic life. (Let but the true poet be given us, we repeat it, place him where and how you will, and true poetry will not be wanting.)

Independently of the essential gift of poetic feeling, as we have now attempted to describe it, a certain rugged sterling worth pervades whatever Burns has written; a virtue, as of green fields and mountain breezes, dwells in his poetry; it is redolent of natural life and hardy natural men. There is a decisive strength in him, and yet a sweet native gracefulness: he is tender, he is vehement, yet without constraint or too visible effort; he melts the heart, or inflames it, with a power which seems habitual and familiar to him. We see that in this man there was the gentleness, the trembling pity of a woman, with the deep earnestness, the force and passionate ardor of a hero. Tears lie in him, and consuming fire; as lightning lurks in the drops of the summer cloud. He has a resonance in his bosom for every note of human feeling; the high and the low, the sad, the ludicrous, the joyful, are welcome in their turns to his 'lightly-moved and all-conceiving spirit.' And observe with what a fierce prompt force he grasps his subject, be it what it may! How he fixes, as it were, the full image of the matter in his eye; full and clear in every lineament; and catches the real type and essence of it, amid a thousand accidents and superficial circumstances, no one of which misleads him! Is it of reason, some truth to be discovered? No sophistry, no vain surface-logic detains him; quick, resolute, unerring, he pierces through into the marrow of the question; and speaks his verdict with an emphasis that cannot be forgotten. Is it of description; some visual object to be represented? No poet of any age or nation is more graphic than Burns: the characteristic features disclose themselves to him at a glance; three lines from his hand, and we have a likeness. And, in that rough dialect, in that rude, often awkward metre, so clear and definite a likeness! It seems a draughtsman working with a burnt stick; and yet the burin of a Retzsch° is not more expressive or exact.

Of this last excellence, the plainest and most comprehensive of all, being indeed the root and foundation of every sort of talent, poetical or intellectual, we could produce innumerable instances from the writings of Burns. Take these glimpses of a snow-storm from his Winter Night (the italics are ours);

When biting Boreas,° fell and doure,
Sharp shivers thro' the leafless bow'r,
And Phœbus° gies a short-liv'd glowr°
Far south the lift,°
Dim-dark'ning thro' the flaky show'r
Or whirling drift:

Ae night the storm the steeples rock'd,
Poor labor sweet in sleep was lock'd,
While burns° wi' snawy wreeths° upchok'd
Wild-eddying swirl,
Or thro' the mining outlet bock'd°
Down headlong hurl.

Are there not 'descriptive touches' here? The describer saw this thing; the essential feature and true likeness of every circumstance in it; saw, and not with the eye only. 'Poor labor locked in sweet sleep'; the dead stillness of man, unconscious, vanquished, yet not unprotected, while such strife of the material elements rages, and seems to reign supreme in loneliness: this is of the heart as well as of the eye! — Look also at his image of a thaw, and prophesied fall of the Auld Brig:

When heavy, dark, continued, a'-day rains,
Wi' deepening deluges o'erflow the plains;
When from the hills where springs the brawling Coil,
Or stately Lugar's mossy fountains boil,
Or where the Greenock winds his moorland course,
Or haunted Garpal[1] draws his feeble source,
Arous'd by blust'ring winds and spotting thowes,°
In mony a torrent down his snaw-broo° rowes;
While crashing ice, borne on the roaring spate,° Sweeps dams and mills and brigs a' to the gate;
And from Glenbuck down to the Ratton-key,
Auld Ayr is just one lengthen'd, tumbling sea;
Then down ye'll hurl, Deil nor ye never rise!
And dash the gumlie jaups° up to the pouring skies.

The last line is in itself a Poussin-picture° of that Deluge! The welkin has, as it were, bent down with its weight; the 'gumlie jaups' and the 'pouring skies' are mingled together; it is a world of rain and ruin. — In respect of mere clearness and minute fidelity, the Farmer's commendation of his Auld Mare, in plough or in cart, may vie with Homer's Smithy of the Cyclops,° or yoking of Priam's Chariot.° Nor have we forgotten stout Burn-the-wind° and his brawny customers, inspired by Scotch Drink: but it is needless to multiply examples. One other trait of a much finer ort we select from multitudes of such among his ongs. It gives, in a single line, to the saddest feel- ng the saddest environment and local habitation:

[1] Fabulosus Hydaspes!°

> The pale Moon is setting beyond the white wave,
> And time is setting wi' me, O;
> Farewell, false friends! false lover, farewell!
> I'll nae mair trouble them nor thee, O.

This clearness of sight we have called the founda- ion of all talent; for in fact, unless we see our object, ow shall we know how to place or prize it, in our nderstanding, our imagination, our affections? Yet t is not in itself perhaps, a very high excellence; but apable of being united indifferently with the strong- st, or with ordinary power. Homer surpasses all men n this quality: but strangely enough, at no great dis- ance below him are Richardson and Defoe. It belongs, n truth, to what is called a lively mind; and gives no ure indication of the higher endowments that may xist along with it. In all the three cases we have nentioned, it is combined with great garrulity; their lescriptions are detailed, ample and lovingly exact; Homer's fire bursts through, from time to time, as if y accident; but Defoe° and Richardson° have no fire. Burns, again, is not more distinguished by the clear- ess than by the impetuous force of his conceptions.

Of the strength, the piercing emphasis with wh thought, his emphasis of expression may give a ble but the readiest proof. Who ever uttered sl sayings than his; words more memorable, nc their burning vehemence, now by their cool vig laconic pith? A single phrase depicts a whol ject, a whole scene. We hear of 'a gentleman tl rived his patent of nobility direct from the Aln
God.' Our Scottish forefathers in the battl struggled forward, he says, 'red-wat-shod'°:
in this one word, a full vision of horror and ca
perhaps too frightfully accurate for Art!

In fact, one of the leading features in the m
Burns is this vigor of his strictly intellectual p tions. A resolute force is ever visible in his ments, and in his feelings and volitions. Pro Stewart° says of him, with some surprise: 'A faculties of Burns's mind were, as far as I could equally vigorous; and his predilection for poetr rather the result of his own enthusiastic and i sioned temper, than of a genius exclusively ad to that species of composition. From his conver
I should have pronounced him to be fitted to ex whatever walk of ambition he had chosen to exe abilities.' But this, if we mistake not, is at all the very essence of a truly poetical endowment. Poetry, except in such cases as that of Keats,° where the whole consists in a weak-eyed maudlin sensibility, and a certain vague random tunefulness of nature, is no separate faculty, no organ which can be superadded to the rest, or disjoined from them; but rather the result of their general harmony and completion. The feelings, the gifts, that exist in the Poet are those that exist, with more or less development, in every human soul: the imagination, which shudders at the Hell of Dante, is the same faculty, weaker in degree, which called that picture into being. How does the Poet speak to men, with power, but by being still more a man than they? Shakespeare, it has been well observed, in the planning and completing of his tragedies, has shown an Understanding, were it nothing more, which might have governed states, or indicted a Novum Organum.° What Burns's force of understanding may have been, we have less means of judging: it had to dwell among the humblest objects; never saw Philosophy; never rose, except by natural effort and for short intervals, into the region of great ideas. Nevertheless, sufficient indication, if no proof sufficient, remains for us in his works: we discern the brawny movements of a gigantic though untutored strength; and can understand how, in conversation, his quick sure insight into men and things may, as much as aught else about him, have amazed the best thinkers of his time and country.

But, unless we mistake, the intellectual gift of Burns is fine as well as strong. The more delicate relations of things could not well have escaped his eye, for they were intimately present to his heart. The logic of the senate and the forum is indispensable, but not all-sufficient; nay, perhaps the highest Truth is that which will the most certainly elude it. For this logic works by words, and 'the highest,' it has been said, 'cannot be expressed in words.' We are not without tokens of an openness for this higher truth also, of a keen though uncultivated sense for it, having existed in Burns. Mr. Stewart, it will be remembered, 'wonders,' in the passage above quoted, that Burns had formed some distinct conception of the 'doctrine of association.'[6] We rather think that far subtler things than the doctrine of association had from of old been familiar to him. Here for instance:

'We know nothing,'[7] thus writes he, 'or next to nothing, of the structure of our souls, so we cannot account for those seeming caprices in them, that one should be particularly pleased with this thing, or struck with that, which, on minds of a different cast, makes no extraordinary impression. I have some favorite flowers in spring, among which are the mountain-daisy, the harebell, the foxglove, the wild-brier rose, the budding birch, and the hoary hawthorn, that I view and hang over with particular delight. I never hear the loud solitary whistle of the curlew in a summer noon, or the wild mixing cadence of a troop of gray plover in an autumnal morning, without feeling an elevation of soul like the enthusiasm of devotion or poetry. Tell me, my dear friend, to what can this be owing? Are we a piece of machinery, which, like the Æolian harp, passive, takes the impression of the passing accident; or do these workings argue something within us above the trodden clod? I own myself partial to such proofs of those awful and important realities: a God that made all things, man's immaterial and immortal nature, and a world of weal or woe beyond death and the grave.'

Force and fineness of understanding are often spoken of as something different from general force and fineness of nature, as something partly independent of them. The necessities of language so require it; but in truth these qualities are not distinct and independent: except in special cases, and from special causes, they ever go together. A man of strong understa

ing is generally a man of strong character; neithe delicacy in the one kind often divided from delic in the other. No one, at all events, is ignorant t in the Poetry of Burns keenness of insight keeps p with keenness of feeling; that his light is not n pervading than his warmth. He is a man of the n impassioned temper; with passions not strong o but noble, and of the sort in which great virtues great poems take their rise. It is reverence, it is towards all Nature that inspires him, that opens eyes to its beauty, and makes heart and voice eloq in its praise. There is a true old saying, that 'I furthers knowledge': but above all, it is the liv essence of that knowledge which makes poets;
first principle of its existence, increase, activity.
Burns's fervid affection, his generous all-embra Love, we have spoken already, as of the grand tinction of his nature, seen equally in word and d in his Life and in his Writings. It were easy to m tiply examples. Not man only, but all that envir man in the material and moral universe, is lovely his sight: 'the hoary hawthorn,' the 'troop of g plover,' the 'solitary curlew,' all are dear to him;
live in this Earth along with him, and to all he is l in mysterious brotherhood. How touching is it, for ɜtance, that, amidst the gloom of personal misery, ooding over the wintry desolation without him and thin him, he thinks of the 'ourie cattle' and 'silly eep,' and their sufferings in the pitiless storm!

I thought me on the ourie° cattle,
Or silly sheep, wha bide this brattle°
O' wintry war,
Or thro' the drift, deep-lairing, sprattle,°
Beneath a scar.°

Ilk° happing bird, wee helpless thing,
That in the merry months o' spring
Delighted me to hear thee sing,
What comes o' thee?
Where wilt thou cow'r thy chittering° wing,
An close thy ee?

ıe tenant of the mean hut, with its 'ragged roof and inky wall,' has a heart to pity even these! This is ɔrth several homilies on Mercy; for it is the voice Mercy herself. Burns, indeed, lives in sympathy; ı soul rushes forth into all realms of being; nothing ıt has existence can be indifferent to him. The :y Devil he cannot hate with right orthodoxy:

But fare you weel, auld Nickie-ben;
O, wad ye tak' a thought and men'!

Ye aiblins° might, — I dinna ken, —
Still hae a stake;
I'm wae to think upo' yon den,
Even for your sake!

"He is the father of curses and lies," said Dr. Slop, "and is cursed and damned already." — "I am sorry for it," quoth my uncle Toby! — a Poet without Love were a physical and metaphysical impossibility.

But has it not been said, in contradiction to this principle, that 'Indignation makes verses'°? It has been so said, and is true enough: but the contradiction is apparent, not real. The Indignation which makes verses is, properly speaking, an inverted Love, the love of some right, some worth, some goodness belonging to ourselves or others, which has been injured, and which this tempestuous feeling issues forth to defend and avenge. No selfish fury of hatred existing there as a primary feeling, and without an opposite, ever produced much Poetry: otherwise, I suppose, the Tiger were the most musical of all creatures. Johnson said, he loved a good hater; by which he must have meant, not so much one that hated violently, as one that hated wisely; hated baseness from love of nobleness. However, in spite of Johnson's° paradox, tolerable enough for once in speech, but which need not have been so often adopted in print since then, we rather believe that good men steal sparingly in hatred, either wise or unwise: nay, that a 'good' hater is still a desideratum in this world. The Devil, at least, who passes for the chief and best of that class, is said to be nowise an amiable character.

Of the verses which Indignation makes, Burns has also given us specimens: and among the best that were ever given. Who will forget his 'Dweller in yon Dungeon dark'; a piece that might have been chanted by the Furies of Æschylus°? The secrets of the infernal Pit are laid bare; a boundless, baleful 'darkness visible'; and streaks of hell-fire quivering madly in its black haggard bosom!

> Dweller in yon Dungeon dark,
> Hangman of Creation, mark!
> Who in widow's weeds appears,
> Laden with unhonored years,
> Noosing with care a bursting purse
> Baited with many a deadly curse!

Why should we speak of Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled; since all know of it, from the king to the meanest of his subjects? This dithyrambic was composed on horseback; in riding in the middle of tempests, over the wildest Galloway moor, in company with a Mr. Syme, who, observing the poet's looks, forbore to speak, — judiciously enough, for a man composing Bruce's Address might be unsafe to trifle with. Doubtless this stern hymn was singing itself, as he formed it, through the soul of Burns: but to the external ear, it should be sung with the throat of the whirlwind. So long as there is warm blood in the heart of Scotchman or man, it will move in fierce thrills under this war-ode; the best, we believe, that was ever written by any pen.

Another wild stormful Song, that dwells in our ear and mind with a strange tenacity, is Macpherson's Farewell. Perhaps there is something in the tradition itself that coöperates. For was not this grim Celt, this shaggy Northland Cacus,° that 'lived a life of sturt° and strife, and died by treacherie,' — was not he too one of the Nimrods° and Napoleons of the earth, in the arena of his own remote misty glens, for want of a clearer and wider one? Nay, was there not a touch of grace given him? A fibre of love and softness, of poetry itself, must have lived in his savage heart: for he composed that air the night before his execution; on the wings of that poor melody his better soul would soar away above oblivion, pain, and all the ignominy and despair, which, like an avalanche, was hurling him to the abyss! Here also, as at Thebes,° and in Pelops' line,° was material Fate matched against man's Free-will; matched in bitterest though obscure duel; and the ethereal soul sank not, even in its blindness, without a cry which has survived it. But who, except Burns, could have given words to such a soul; words that we never listen to without a strange half-barbarous, half-poetic fellow-feeling?

Sae rantingly, sae wantonly,
Sae dauntingly gaed he;
He play'd a spring and danced it round,
Below the gallows-tree.

Under a lighter disguise, the same principle of Love, which we have recognized as the great characteristic of Burns, and of all true poets, occasionally manifests itself in the shape of Humor. Everywhere, indeed, in his sunny moods, a full buoyant flood of mirth rolls through the mind of Burns; he rises to the high, and stoops to the low, and is brother and playmate to all Nature. We speak not of his bold and often irresistible faculty of caricature; for this is Drollery rather than Humor: but a much tenderer sportfulness dwells in him; and comes forth here and there, evanescent and beautiful touches; as in his Addr to the Mouse, or the Farmer's Mare, or in his El on poor Mailie, which last may be reckoned his h piest effort of this kind. In these pieces there traits of a Humor as fine as that of Sterne; altogether different, original, peculiar, — the Hum of Burns.

Of the tenderness, the playful pathos, and ma other kindred qualities of Burns's Poetry, much m might be said; but now, with these poor outlines a sketch, we must prepare to quit this part of our s ject. To speak of his individual Writings, adequate and with any detail, would lead us far beyond c limits. As already hinted, we can look on but f of these pieces as, in strict critical language, dese ing the name of Poems: they are rhymed eloquen rhymed pathos, rhymed sense; yet seldom essential melodious, aërial, poetical. Tam o' Shanter itse which enjoys so high a favor, does not appear to at all decisively to come under this last category. is not so much a poem, as a piece of sparkling rhe ric; the heart and body of the story still lies ha and dead. He has not gone back, much less carri us back, into that dark, earnest, wondering age, wh the tradition was believed, and when it took its rise; he does not attempt, by any new-modelling of his supernatural ware, to strike anew that deep mysterious chord of human nature, which once responded to such things; and which lives in us too, and will forever live, though silent now, or vibrating with far other notes, and to far different issues. Our German readers will understand us, when we say, that he is not the Tieck° but the Musäus° of this tale. Externally it is all green and living; yet look closer, it is no firm growth, but only ivy on a rock. The piece does not properly cohere: the strange chasm which yawns in our incredulous imaginations between the Ayr public-house and the gate of Tophet, is nowhere bridged over, nay, the idea of such a bridge is laughed at; and thus the Tragedy of the adventure becomes a mere drunken phantasmagoria, or many-colored spectrum painted on ale-vapors, and the Farce alone has any reality. We do not say that Burns should have made much more of this tradition; we rather think that, for strictly poetical purposes, not much was to be made of it. Neither are we blind to the deep, varied, genial power displayed in what he has actually accomplished; but we find far more 'Shakespearean' qualities, as these of Tam o' Shanter have been fondly named, in many of his other pieces; nay we incline to believe that this latter might have been written, all but quite as well, by a man who, in place of genius, had only possessed talent.

Perhaps we may venture to say, that the most strictly poetical of all his 'poems' is one which does not appear in Currie's Edition; but has been often printed before and since, under the humble title of The Jolly Beggars. The subject truly is among the lowest in Nature; but it only the more shows our Poet's gift in raising it into the domain of Art. To our minds, this piece seems thoroughly compacted; melted together, refined; and poured forth in one flood of true liquid harmony. It is light, airy, soft of movement; yet sharp and precise in its details; every face is a portrait: that raucle carlin,° that wee Apoll that Son of Mars,° are Scottish, yet ideal; the scene is at once a dream, and the very Ragcastle of 'Poo Nansie.'° Farther, it seems in a considerable degree complete, a real self-supporting Whole, which is highest merit in a poem. The blanket of the Night is drawn asunder for a moment; in full, ruddy, glowing light, these rough tatterdemalions are seen in their boisterous revel; for the strong pulse of life vindicates its right to gladness even here; and ırtain closes, we prolong the action, without the next day as the last, our Caird° and our monger are singing and soldiering; their 'brats allets'° are hawking, begging, cheating; and other night, in new combinations, they will from Fate another hour of wassail and good

Apart from the universal sympathy with hich this again bespeaks in Burns, a genuine tion and no inconsiderable technical talent are sted here. There is the fidelity, humor, warm d accurate painting and grouping of some Tenor whom hostlers and carousing peasants are not t significance. It would be strange, doubtless, this the best of Burns's writings: we mean to ly, that it seems to us the most perfect of its
as a piece of poetical composition, strictly so

In the Beggars' Opera,° in the Beggars' as other critics have already remarked, there hing which, in real poetic vigor, equals this a ; nothing, as we think, which comes within degrees of it.

by far the most finished, complete, and truly d pieces of Burns are, without dispute, to be among his Songs. It is here that, although through a small aperture, his light shines with obstruction; in its highest beauty and pure clearness. The reason may be, that Song is a simple species of composition; and requires nc so much for its perfection as genuine poetic fe genuine music of heart. Yet the Song has its equally with the Tragedy; rules which in most are poorly fulfilled, in many cases are not so m felt. We might write a long essay on the So Burns; which we reckon by far the best that E has yet produced: for indeed, since the era of Elizabeth, we know not that, by any other hand, truly worth attention has been accomplished i department. True, we have songs enough 'b sons of quality'; we have tawdry, hollow, win madrigals; many a rhymed speech 'in the flowi watery vein of Ossorius° the Portugal Bishop,' r sonorous words, and, for moral, dashed perhap some tint of a sentimental sensuality; all which persons cease not from endeavoring to sing; t for most part, we fear, the music is but fro throat outwards, or at best from some regic enough short of the Soul; not in which, bu certain inane Limbo of the Fancy, or even in vaporous debatable-land on the outskirts of th ıs Syscem, most of such madrigals and rhymed ıeches seem to have originated.

With the Songs of Burns we must not name these ngs. Independently of the clear, manly, heartfelt ıtiment that ever pervades his poetry, his Songs are ıest in another point of view: in form, as well as spirit. They do not affect to be set to music, but ıy actually and in themselves are music; they have eived their life, and fashioned themselves together, the medium of Harmony, as Venus rose from the ıom of the sea. The story, the feeling, is not ailed, but suggested; not said, or spouted, in rhe- ical completeness and coherence; but sung, in fitful ıhes, in glowing hints, in fantastic breaks, in war- ıgs not of the voice only, but of the whole mind. ı consider this to be the essence of a song; and ıt no songs since the little careless catches, and as vere drops of song, which Shakespeare has here and re sprinkled over his Plays, fulfil this condition nearly the same degree as most of Burns's do. ıh grace and truth of external movement, too, pre- ıposes in general a corresponding force and truth sentiment and inward meaning. The Songs of rns are not more perfect in the former quality n in the latter. With what tenderness he sings, yet with what vehemence and entireness! There is a piercing wail in his sorrow, the purest rapture in his joy; he burns with the sternest ire, or laughs with the loudest or sliest mirth; and yet he is sweet and soft, 'sweet as the smile when fond lovers meet, and soft as their parting tear.' If we farther take into account the immense variety of his subjects; how, from the loud flowing revel in Willie brew'd a Peck o' Maut, to the still, rapt enthusiasm of sadness for Mary in Heaven; from the glad kind greeting of Auld Langsyne, or the comic archness of Duncan Gray, to the fire-eyed fury of Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled, he has found a tone and words for every mood of man's heart, — it will seem a small praise if we rank him as the first of all our Song-writers; for we know not where to find one worthy of being second to him.

It is on his Songs, as we believe, that Burns's chief influence as an author will ultimately be found to depend: nor, if our Fletcher's° aphorism is true, shall we account this a small influence. 'Let me make the songs of a people,' said he, 'and you shall make its laws.' Surely, if ever any Poet might have equalled himself with Legislators on this ground, it was Burns. His Songs are already part of the mother-tongue, not of Scotland only but of Britain, and of the millions that in all ends of the earth speak a British language. In hut and hall, as the heart unfolds itself in many-colored joy and woe of existence, the name, the voice of that joy and that woe, is the name and voice which Burns has given them. Strictly speaking, perhaps no British man has so deeply affected the thoughts and feelings of so many men, as this solitary and altogether private individual, with means apparently the humblest.

In another point of view, moreover, we incline to think that Burns's influence may have been considerable: we mean, as exerted specially on the Literature of his country, at least on the Literature of Scotland. Among the great changes which British, particularly Scottish, literature has undergone since that period, one of the greatest will be found to consist in its remarkable increase of nationality. Even the English writers, most popular in Burns's time, were little distinguished for their literary patriotism, in this its best sense. A certain attenuated cosmopolitanism had, in good measure, taken place of the old insular home-feeling; literature was, as it were, without any local environment; was not nourished by the affections which spring from a native soil. Our Grays and Glovers° seemed to write almost as if in vacuo; the thing written bears no mark of place; it is not written so much for Englishmen, as for men; or rather, which is the inevitable result of this, for certain Generalizations which philosophy termed men. Goldsmith° is an exception: not so Johnson°; the scene of his Rambler° is little more English than that of his Rasselas.°

But if such was, in some degree, the case with England, it was, in the highest degree, the case with Scotland. In fact, our Scottish literature had, at that period, a very singular aspect; unexampled, so far as we know, except perhaps at Geneva, where the same state of matters appears still to continue. For a long period after Scotland became British, we had no literature: at the date when Addison and Steele were writing their Spectators, our good John Boston° was writing, with the noblest intent, but alike in defiance of grammar and philosophy, his Fourfold State of Man. Then came the schisms in our National Church, and the fiercer schisms in our Body Politic: Theologic ink, and Jacobite blood, with gall enough in both cases, seemed to have blotted out the intellect of the country: however, it was only obscured, not obliterated. Lord Kames° made nearly the first attempt at writing English; and ere long, Hume,° obertson,° Smith,° and a whole host of followers, tracted hither the eyes of all Europe. And yet this brilliant resuscitation of our 'fervid genius,' ere was nothing truly Scottish, nothing indigenous; cept, perhaps, the natural impetuosity of intellect, hich we sometimes claim, and are sometimes upaided with, as a characteristic of our nation. It is rious to remark that Scotland, so full of writers, had Scottish culture, nor indeed any English; our culre was almost exclusively French. It was by studyg Racine° and Voltaire,° Batteux° and Boileau,° that ames had trained himself to be a critic and philosoıer; it was the light of Montesquieu° and Mably° at guided Robertson in his political speculations; ıesnay's° lamp that kindled the lamp of Adam Smith. ume was too rich a man to borrow; and perhaps he acted on the French more than he was acted on by em: but neither had he aught to do with Scotland; linburgh, equally with La Flèche,° was but the lodg g and laboratory, in which he set so much morally ed, as metaphysically investigated. Never, perhaps, as there a class of writers so clear and well-ordered, t so totally destitute, to all appearance, of any patric affection, nay, of any human affection whatever. ıe French wits of the period were as unpatriotic:

PROPERTY OF
BOARD OF EDUCATION
LEONIA, N.J.
Book No. 26

but their general deficiency in moral principle, not to say their avowed sensuality and unbelief in all virtue, strictly so called, render this accountable enough. We hope, there is a patriotism founded on something better than prejudice; that our country may be dear to us, without injury to our philosophy; that in loving and justly prizing all other lands, we may prize justly, and yet love before all others, our own stern Motherland, and the venerable Structure of social and moral Life, which Mind has through long ages been building up for us there. Surely there is nourishment for the better part of man's heart in all this: surely the roots, that have fixed themselves in the very core of man's being, may be so cultivated as to grow up not into briers, but into roses, in the field of his life! Our Scottish sages have no such propensities: the field of their life shows neither briers nor roses; but only a flat, continuous thrashing-floor for Logic, whereon all questions, from the 'Doctrine of Rent' to the 'Natural History of Religion,' are thrashed and sifted with the same mechanical impartiality!

With Sir Walter Scott at the head of our literature, it cannot be denied that much of this evil is past, or rapidly passing away: our chief literary men, whatever other faults they may have, no longer live among like a French Colony, or some knot of Propaganda issionaries; but like natural-born subjects of the soil, rtaking and sympathizing in all our attachments, mors and habits. Our literature no longer grows water but in mould, and with the true racy virtues the soil and climate. How much of this change ay be due to Burns, or to any other individual, it ght be difficult to estimate. Direct literary imi-ion of Burns was not to be looked for. But his ample, in the fearless adoption of domestic subjects, uld not but operate from afar; and certainly in no art did the love of country ever burn with a warmer ow than in that of Burns: 'a tide of Scottish preju-e,' as he modestly calls this deep and generous feel-g, 'had been poured along his veins; and he felt that would boil there till the flood-gates shut in eternal st.' It seemed to him, as if he could do so little for s country, and yet would so gladly have done all. ie small province stood open for him, — that of ottish Song; and how eagerly he entered on it, how votedly he labored there! In his toilsome journey-gs, this objects never quits him; it is the little happy-lley of his careworn heart. In the gloom of his own liction, he eagerly searches after some lonely brother the muse, and rejoices to snatch one other name from the oblivion that was covering it! These early feelings, and they abode with him to the end

> . . . A wish° (I mind its power),
> A wish, that to my latest hour
> Will strongly heave my breast, —
> That I, for poor auld Scotland's sake,
> Some useful plan or book could make,
> Or sing a sang at least.
>
> The rough bur Thistle spreading wide
> Amang the bearded bear,°
> I turn'd my weeding-clips aside,
> And spared the symbol dear.

But to leave the mere literary character of Bu which has already detained us too long. Far n interesting than any of his written works, as it pears to us, are his acted ones: the Life he willed was fated to lead among his fellow-men. These Po are but like little rhymed fragments scattered here there in the grand unrhymed Romance of his ear existence; and it is only when intercalated in thi their proper places, that they attain their full mea of significance. And this too, alas, was but a fragm
The plan of a mighty edifice had been sketched; s columns, porticos, firm masses of building, stand pleted; the rest more or less clearly indicated;

many a far-stretching tendency, which only studious and friendly eyes can now trace towards the purposed termination. For the work is broken off in the middle, almost in the beginning; and rises among us, beautiful and sad, at once unfinished and a ruin! If charitable judgment was necessary in estimating his Poems, and justice required that the aim and the manifest power to fulfil it must often be accepted for the fulfilment; much more is this the case in regard to his Life, the sum and result of all his endeavors, where his difficulties came upon him not in detail only, but in mass; and so much has been left unaccomplished, nay, was mistaken, and altogether marred.

Properly speaking, there is but one era in the life of Burns, and that the earliest. We have not youth and manhood, but only youth: for, to the end, we discern no decisive change in the complexion of his character; in his thirty-seventh year, he is still, as it were, in youth. With all that resoluteness of judgment, that penetrating insight, and singular maturity of intellectual power, exhibited in his writings, he never attains any clearness regarding himself°; to the last, he never ascertains his peculiar aim,° even with such instinctness as is common among ordinary men; and therefore never can pursue it with that singleness of will, which insures success and some contentment t… such men. To the last, he wavers between two pu… poses: glorying in his talent, like a true poet, he y… cannot consent to make this his chief and sole glory… and to follow it as the one thing needful, through po… erty or riches, through good or evil report. Anothe… far meaner ambition still cleaves to him; he mu… dream and struggle about a certain 'Rock of Indepe… dence'; which, natural and even admirable as it migh… be, was still but a warring with the world, on the com… paratively insignificant ground of his being more com… pletely or less completely supplied with money tha… others; of his standing at a higher or at a lower alti… tude in general estimation than others. For the worl… still appears to him, as to the young, in borrowed col… ors: he expects from it what it cannot give to any… man; seeks for contentment, not within himself, i… action and wise effort, but from without, in the kind… ness of circumstances, in love, friendship, honor, pecun… iary ease. He would be happy, not actively and i… himself, but passively and from some ideal cornuco… pia of Enjoyments, not earned by his own labor, but… showered on him by the beneficence of Destiny. Thus… like a young man, he cannot gird himself up for any… worthy well-calculated goal, but swerves to and fro…

between passionate hope and remorseful disappointment: rushing onwards with a deep tempestuous force, he surmounts or breaks asunder many a barrier; travels, nay, advances far, but advancing only under uncertain guidance, is ever and anon turned from his path; and to the last cannot reach the only true happiness of a man, that of clear decided Activity in the sphere for which, by nature and circumstances, he has been fitted and appointed.

We do not say these things in dispraise of Burns; nay, perhaps, they but interest us the more in his favor. This blessing is not given soonest to the best; but rather, it is often the greatest minds that are latest in obtaining it; for where most is to be developed, most time may be required to develop it. A complex condition had been assigned him from without; as complex a condition from within: no 'pre-established harmony' existed between the clay soil of Mossgiel and the empyrean soul of Robert Burns; it was not wonderful that the adjustment between them should have been long postponed, and his arm long cumbered, and his sight confused, in so vast and discordant an economy as he had been appointed steward over. Byron was, at his death, but a year younger than Burns; and through life, as it might have appeared, far more simply situated: yet in him too we can trace no such adjustment, no such moral manhood; but at best, and only a little before his end, the beginning of what seemed such.

By much the most striking incident in Burns's Life is his journey to Edinburgh; but perhaps a still more important one is his residence at Irvine, so early as in his twenty-third year. Hitherto his life had been poor and toilworn; but otherwise not ungenial, and, with all its distresses, by no means unhappy. In his parentage, deducting outward circumstances, he had every reason to reckon himself fortunate. His father was a man of thoughtful, intense, earnest character, as the best of our peasants are; valuing knowledge, possessing some, and, what is far better and rarer, open-minded for more: a man with a keen insight and devout heart; reverent towards God, friendly therefore at once, and fearless towards all that God has made: in one word, though but a hard-handed peasant, a complete and fully unfolded Man. Such a father is seldom found in any rank in society; and was worth descending far in society to seek. Unfortunately, he was very poor; had he been even a little richer, almost never so little, the whole might have issued far otherwise. Mighty events turn on a straw;

the crossing of a brook decides the conquest of the world. Had this William Burns's small seven acres of nursery-ground anywise prospered, the boy Robert had been sent to school; had struggled forward, as so many weaker men do, to some university; come forth not as a rustic wonder, but as a regular well-trained intellectual workman, and changed the whole course of British Literature,—for it lay in him to have done this! But the nursery did not prosper; poverty sank his whole family below the help of even our cheap school-system: Burns remained a hard-worked ploughboy, and British literature took its own course. Nevertheless, even in this rugged scene there is much to nourish him. If he drudges, it is with his brother, and for his father and mother, whom he loves, and would fain shield from want. Wisdom is not banished from their poor hearth, nor the balm of natural feeling: the solemn words, Let us worship God, are heard there from a 'priest-like father'[°]: if threatenings of unjust men throw mother and children into tears, these are tears not of grief only, but of holiest affection; every heart in that humble group feels itself the closer knit to every other; in their hard warfare they are there together, a 'little band of brethren.' Neither are such tears, and the deep beauty that dwells in them, their only portion. Light visits the hearts as it does the eyes of all living: there is a force, too, in this youth, that enables him to trample on misfortune; nay, to bind it under his feet to make him sport. For a bold, warm, buoyant humor of character has been given him; and so the thick-coming shapes of evil are welcomed with a gay, friendly irony, and in their closest pressure he bates no jot of heart or hope. Vague yearnings of ambition fail not, as he grows up; dreamy fancies hang like cloud-cities around him; the curtain of Existence is slowly rising, in many-colored splendor and gloom: and the auroral light of first love is gilding his horizon, and the music of song is on his path; and so he walks

. . . . . in glory and in joy,°
Behind his plough, upon the mountain side.

We ourselves know, from the best evidence, that up to this date Burns was happy; nay, that he was the gayest, brightest, most fantastic, fascinating being to be found in the world; more so even than he ever afterwards appeared. But now, at this early age, he quits the paternal roof; goes forth into looser, louder, more exciting society; and becomes initiated in those dissipations, those vices, which a certain class of phiıophers have asserted to be a natural preparation r entering on active life; a kind of mud-bath, in ıich the youth is, as it were, necessitated to steep, ıd, we suppose, cleanse himself, before the real toga Manhood can be laid on him. We shall not dis- ıte much with this class of philosophers; we hope ey are mistaken: for Sin and Remorse so easily ıset us at all stages of life, and are always such different company, that it seems hard we should, at y stage, be forced and fated not only to meet but yield to them, and even serve for a term in their ɔrous armada. We hope it is not so. Clear we are, all events, it cannot be the training one receives this Devil's-service, but only our determining to sert from it, that fits us for true manly Action. e become men, not after we have been dissipated, d disappointed in the chase of false pleasure; but ɛr we have ascertained, in any way, what impas- ɔle barriers hem us in through this life; how mad is to hope for contentment to our infinite soul ɔm the gifts of this extremely finite world; that a ın must be sufficient for himself; and that for suf- ɛing and enduring there is no remedy but striving d doing. (Manhood begins when we have in any y made truce with Necessity; begins even when we have surrendered to Necessity, as the most p only do; but begins joyfully and hopefully only wh

we have reconciled ourselves to Necessity; and th in reality, triumphed over it, and felt that in Nec sity we are free. Surely, such lessons as this la which, in one shape or other, is the grand lesson f every mortal man, are better learned from the lips
a devout mother, in the looks and actions of a devo father, while the heart is yet soft and pliant, than collision with the sharp adamant of Fate, attracti us to shipwreck us, when the heart is grown har and may be broken before it will become contri
Had Burns continued to learn this, as he was alrea learning it, in his father's cottage, he would ha learned it fully, which he never did, and been sav many a lasting aberration, many a bitter hour a year of remorseful sorrow.

It seems to us another circumstance of fatal import Burns's history, that at this time too he became involv in the religious quarrels of his district; that he w enlisted and feasted, as the fighting man of the Ne
Light Priesthood, in their highly unprofitable warfa
At the tables of these free-minded clergy he learn much more than was needful for him. Such libe ridicule of fanaticism awakened in his mind scrupl

about Religion itself; and a whole world of Doubts, which it required quite another set of conjurers than these men to exorcise. We do not say that such an intellect as his could have escaped similar doubts at some period of his history; or even that he could, at a later period, have come through them altogether victorious and unharmed: but it seems peculiarly unfortunate that this time, above all others, should have been fixed for the encounter. For now, with principles assailed by evil example from without, by 'passions raging like demons'[o] from within, he had little need of sceptical misgivings to whisper treason in the heat of the battle, or to cut off his retreat if he were already defeated. He loses his feeling of innocence; his mind is at variance with itself; the old divinity no longer presides there; but wild Desires and wild Repentance alternately oppress him. Ere long, too, he has committed himself before the world; his character for sobriety, dear to a Scottish peasant as few corrupted worldlings can even conceive, is destroyed in the eyes of men; and his only refuge consists in trying to disbelieve his guiltiness, and is but a refuge of lies. The blackest desperation now gathers over him, broken only by red lightnings of remorse. The whole fabric of his life is blasted asunder: for now not only his character, but his personal liberty, is to be lost; men and Fortune are leagued for his hurt; 'hungry Ruin has him in the wind.'° He sees no escape but the saddest of all: exile from his loved country, to a country in every sense inhospitable and abhorrent to him. While the 'gloomy night is gathering fast,'° in mental storm and solitude, as well as in physical, he sings his wild farewell to Scotland:

> Farewell, my friends; farewell, my foes!
> My peace with these, my love with those:
> The bursting tears my heart declare;
> Adieu, my native banks of Ayr!

Light breaks suddenly in on him in floods; but still a false transitory light, and no real sunshine. He is invited to Edinburgh; hastens thither with anticipating heart; is welcomed as in a triumph, and with universal blandishment and acclamation; whatever is wisest, whatever is greatest or loveliest there, gathers round him, to gaze on his face, to show him honor, sympathy, affection. Burns's appearance among the sages and nobles of Edinburgh must be regarded as one of the most singular phenomena in modern Literature; almost like the appearance of some Napoleon among the crowned sovereigns of modern Politics. For it is nowise as a 'mockery king,' set there by favor, transiently and for a purpose, that he will let himself be treated; still less is he a mad Rienzi,° whose sudden elevation turns his too weak head: but he stands there on his own basis; cool, unastonished, holding his equal rank from Nature herself; putting forth no claim which there is not strength in him, as well as about him, to vindicate. Mr. Lockhart has some forcible observations on this point:

'It needs no effort of imagination,' says he, 'to conceive what the sensations of an isolated set of scholars (almost all either clergymen or professors) must have been in the presence of this big-boned, black-browed, brawny stranger, with his great flashing eyes, who, having forced his way among them from the plough-tail at a single stride, manifested in the whole strain of his bearing and conversation a most thorough conviction, that in the society of the most eminent men of his nation he was exactly where he was entitled to be; hardly deigned to flatter them by exhibiting even an occasional symptom of being flattered by their notice; by turns calmly measured himself against the most cultivated understandings of his time in discussion; overpowered the bon-mots of the most celebrated convivialists by broad floods of n ment, impregnated with all the burning life of ge astounded bosoms habitually enveloped in the tl piled folds of social reserve, by compelling the tremble, — nay, to tremble visibly, — beneath fearless touch of natural pathos; and all this wi indicating the smallest willingness to be ranked a those professional ministers of excitement, who ar tent to be paid in money and smiles for doing the spectators and auditors would be ashamed of in their own persons, even if they had the pow doing it; and last, and probably worst of all,

was known to be in the habit of enlivening soci which they would have scorned to approach, still frequently than their own, with eloquence no less nificent; with wit, in all likelihood still more da often enough, as the superiors whom he fronted out alarm might have guessed from the begin and had ere long no occasion to guess, with wit po at themselves.'

The farther we remove from this scene, the singular will it seem to us: details of the ext aspect of it are already full of interest. Most re recollect Mr. Walker's personal interviews with E as among the best passages of his Narrative: a time will come when this reminiscence of Sir Walter Scott's, slight though it is, will also be precious:

'As for Burns,' writes Sir Walter, 'I may truly say, Virgilium vidi tantum.° I was a lad of fifteen in 1786–7, when he came first to Edinburgh, but had sense and feeling enough to be much interested in his poetry, and would have given the world to know him: but I had very little acquaintance with any literary people, and still less with the gentry of the west country; the two sets that he most frequented. Mr. Thomas Grierson was at that time a clerk of my father's. He knew Burns, and promised to ask him to his lodgings to dinner; but had no opportunity to keep his word; otherwise I might have seen more of this distinguished man. As it was, I saw him one day at the late venerable Professor Ferguson's, where there were several gentlemen of literary reputation, among whom I remember the celebrated Mr. Dugald Stewart. Of course, we youngsters sat silent, looked, and listened. The only thing I remember which was remarkable in Burns's manner, was the effect produced upon him by a print of Bunbury's, representing a soldier lying dead on the snow, his dog sitting in misery on one side, — on the other, his widow, with a her arms. These lines were written beneath:

"Cold on Canadian hills, or Minden's plain,
Perhaps that mother wept her soldier slain;
Bent o'er her babe, her eye dissolved in dew,
The big drops mingling with the milk he drew
Gave the sad presage of his future years,
The child of misery, baptized in tears."

'Burns seemed much affected by the print, c by the ideas which it suggested to his mind.
ally shed tears. He asked whose the lines we it chanced that nobody but myself remembe they occur in a half-forgotten poem of Lang called by the unpromising title of "The Ju Peace." I whispered my information to a frie ent; he mentioned it to Burns, who rewarded n look and a word, which, though of mere civility received and still recollect with very great ple

'His person was strong and robust; his mani tic, not clownish; a sort of dignified plainness plicity, which received part of its effect perha one's knowledge of his extraordinary talent features are represented in Mr. Nasmyth's but to me it conveys the idea that they are ished, as if seen in perspective. I think his nance was more massive than it looks in any of the portraits. I should have taken the poet, had I not known what he was, for a very sagacious country farmer of the old Scotch school, i.e., none of your modern agriculturists who kept laborers for their drudgery, but the douce gudeman who held his own plough. There was a strong expression of sense and shrewdness in all his lineaments; the eye alone, I think, indicated the poetical character and temperament. It was large, and of a dark cast, which glowed (I say literally glowed) when he spoke with feeling or interest. I never saw such another eye in a human head, though I have seen the most distinguished men of my time. His conversation expressed perfect self-confidence, without the slightest presumption. Among the men who were the most learned of their time and country, he expressed himself with perfect firmness, but without the least intrusive forwardness; and when he differed in opinion, he did not hesitate to express it firmly, yet at the same time with modesty. I do not remember any part of his conversation distinctly enough to be quoted; nor did I ever see him again, except in the street, where he did not recognize me, as I could not expect he should. He was much caressed in Edinburgh: but (considering what literary emoluments have been since his day) the efforts made for his relief were extremely trifling.

'I remember, on this occasion I mention, I thought Burns's acquaintance with English poetry was rather limited; and also that, having twenty times the abilities of Allan Ramsay and of Ferguson, he talked of them with too much humility as his models: there was doubtless national predilection in his estimate.

'This is all I can tell you about Burns. I have only to add, that his dress corresponded with his manner. He was like a farmer dressed in his best to dine with the laird. I do not speak in malam partem,° when I say, I never saw a man in company with his superiors in station or information more perfectly free from either the reality or the affectation of embarrassment. I was told, but did not observe it, that his address to females was extremely deferential, and always with a turn either to the pathetic or humorous, which engaged their attention particularly. I have heard the late Duchess of Gordon remark this. — I do not know anything I can add to these recollections of forty years since.'

The conduct of Burns under this dazzling blaze of favor; the calm, unaffected, manly manner in which ɔt only bore it, but estimated its value, has justly regarded as the best proof that could be given of eal vigor and integrity of mind. A little natural ɔy, some touches of hypocritical modesty, some merings of affectation, at least some fear of being ght affected, we could have pardoned in almost man; but no such indication is to be traced here. is unexampled situation the young peasant is not ɔment perplexed; so many strange lights do not use him, do not lead him astray. Nevertheless, annot but perceive that this winter did him great lasting injury. A somewhat clearer knowledge of s affairs, scarcely of their characters, it did afford ; but a sharper feeling of Fortune's unequal arements in their social destiny it also left with

He had seen the gay and gorgeous arena, in ɔh the powerful are born to play their parts; nay, himself stood in the midst of it; and he felt more rly than ever, that here he was but a looker-on, had no part or lot in that splendid game. From time a jealous indignant fear of social degradation s possession of him; and perverts, so far as aught l pervert, his private contentment, and his feelings ɹrds his richer fellows. It was clear to Burns that ad talent enough to make a fortune, or a hundred fortunes, could he but have rightly willed this; clear also that he willed something far differen therefore could not make one. Unhappy it wa he had not power to choose the one, and reje other; but must halt forever between two opi two objects; making hampered advancement to either. But so is it with many men: we 'loi the merchandise, yet would fain keep the price' so stand chaffering with Fate, in vexatious alterc till the night come, and our fair is over!

The Edinburgh Learned of that period were i eral more noted for clearness of head than for w of heart: with the exception of the good old lock, whose help was too ineffectual, scarcel among them seems to have looked at Burns wit true sympathy, or indeed much otherwise than a highly curious thing. By the great also he is t in the customary fashion; entertained at their and dismissed: certain modica of pudding and are, from time to time, gladly exchanged for th cination of his presence; which exchange once ef the bargain is finished, and each party goes hi eral way. At the end of this strange season, gloomily sums up his gains and losses, and me on the chaotic future. In money he is som ther; in fame and the show of happiness, infinitely ther; but in the substance of it, as poor as ever. ay, poorer; for his heart is now maddened still ore with the fever of worldly Ambition; and rough long years the disease will rack him with profitable sufferings, and weaken his strength for l true and nobler aims.

What Burns was next to do or to avoid; how a an so circumstanced was now to guide himself wards his true advantage, might at this point of me have been a question for the wisest. It was a uestion too, which apparently he was left altogether answer for himself: of his learned or rich patrons had not struck any individual to turn a thought on is so trivial matter. Without claiming for Burns e praise of perfect sagacity, we must say, that his xcise and Farm scheme does not seem to us a very nreasonable one; that we should be at a loss, even ow, to suggest one decidedly better. Certain of his dmirers have felt scandalized at his ever resolving to ruge; and would have had him lie at the pool, till e spirit of Patronage stirred the waters, that so, ith one friendly plunge, all his sorrows might be ealed. Unwise counsellors! They know not the anner of this spirit; and how, in the lap of most golden dreams, a man might have happiness, were not that in the interim he must die of hunger! reflects credit on the manliness and sound sense Burns, that he felt so early on what ground he w standing; and preferred self-help, on the humble scale, to dependence and inaction, though with ho of far more splendid possibilities. But even the possibilities were not rejected in his scheme: might expect, if it chanced that he had any friend, rise, in no long period, into something even like op lence and leisure; while again, if it chanced that had no friend, he could still live in security; and f the rest, he 'did not intend to borrow honor from a profession.' We think, then, that his plan was ho est and well-calculated: all turned on the executi of it. Doubtless it failed; yet not, we believe, fro any vice inherent in itself. Nay, after all, it was failure of external means, but of internal, that ov took Burns. His was no bankruptcy of the pur but of the soul; to his last day, he owed no m anything.

Meanwhile he begins well: with two good and wi actions. His donation to his mother, munificent fr a man whose income had lately been seven poun a-year, was worthy of him, and not more than worth enerous also, and worthy of him, was his treatment f the woman whose life's welfare now depended on is pleasure. A friendly observer might have hoped erene days for him: his mind is on the true road to eace with itself: what clearness he still wants will e given as he proceeds; for the best teacher of duties hat still lie dim to us, is the Practice of those we see nd have at hand. Had the 'patrons of genius,' who ould give him nothing, but taken nothing from him, t least nothing more! The wounds of his heart would have healed, vulgar ambition would have died way. Toil and Frugality would have been welcome, ince Virtue dwelt with them; and Poetry would have shone through them as of old: and in her clear thereal light, which was his own by birthright, he might have looked down on his earthly destiny and ll its obstructions, not with patience only, but with ove.

But the patrons of genius would not have it so. Picturesque tourists,[1] all manner of fashionable dan-

[1] There is one little sketch by certain 'English gentlemen' of this class, which, though adopted in Currie's Narrative, and since then repeated in most others, we have all along felt an invincible disposition to regard as imaginary: 'On a rock that projected into the stream, they saw a man employed in angling, glers after literature, and, far worse, all manner convivial Mæcenases,° hovered round him in retreat; and his good as well as his weak qualities secured them influence over him. He was flattered by their notice; and his warm social nature made impossible for him to shake them off, and hold on way apart from them. These men, as we believe were proximately the means of his ruin. Not that they meant him any ill; they only meant themselves a little good; if he suffered harm, let him look to it. But they wasted his precious time and his precious talent; they disturbed his composure, broke down his returning habits of temperance and assiduous contented exertion. Their pampering was baneful of a singular appearance. He had a cap made of fox skin on his head, a loose greatcoat fixed round him by a belt, from which depended an enormous Highland broad-sword. It was Burns.' Now, we rather think, it was not Burns. For, to say nothing of the fox skin cap, the loose and quite Hibernian watchcoat with the belt, what are we to make of this 'enormous Highland broad-sword' depending from him? More especially, as there is no word of parish constables on the look out to see whether, as Dennis phrases it, he had an eye to his own midriff or that of the public! Burns, of all men, had the least need, and the least tendency, to seek for distinction, either in his own eyes, or those of others, by such poor mummeries.

him; their cruelty, which soon followed, was equally baneful. The old grudge against Fortune's inequality awoke with new bitterness in their neighborhood; and Burns had no retreat but to 'the Rock of Independence,' which is but an air-castle after all, that looks well at a distance, but will screen no one from real wind and wet. Flushed with irregular excitement, exasperated alternately by contempt of others, and contempt of himself, Burns was no longer regaining his peace of mind, but fast losing it forever. There was a hollowness at the heart of his life, for his conscience did not now approve what he was doing. Amid the vapors of unwise enjoyment, of bootless remorse, and angry discontent with Fate, his true loadstar, a life of Poetry, with Poverty, nay, with Famine if it must be so, was too often altogether hidden from his eyes. And yet he sailed a sea, where without some such loadstar there was no right steering. Meteors of French Politics rise before him, but these were not his stars. An accident this, which hastened, but did not originate, his worst distresses. In the mad contentions of that time, he comes in collision with certain official Superiors; is wounded by them; cruelly lacerated, we should say, could a dead mechanical implement, in any case, be called cruel:

and shrinks, in indignant pain, into deeper self-s sion, into gloomier moodiness than ever. His life now lost its unity: it is a life of fragments; led little aim, beyond the melancholy one of securin own continuance, — in fits of wild false joy such offered, and of black despondency when passed away. His character before the world b to suffer: calumny is busy with him; for a mise man makes more enemies than friends. Some f he has fallen into, and a thousand misfortunes;
deep criminality is what he stands accused of,
they that are not without sin cast the first ston him! For is he not a well-wisher to the Fr Revolution, a Jacobin,° and therefore in that on guilty of all? These accusations, political and m it has since appeared, were false enough: but world hesitated little to credit them. Nay, his vivial Mæcenases themselves were not the last t
it. There is reason to believe that, in his later y the Dumfries Aristocracy had partly withdrawn t selves from Burns, as from a tainted person no lo worthy of their acquaintance. That painful c stationed, in all provincial cities, behind the outr breastwork of Gentility, there to stand siege and battle against the intrusions of Grocerdom and

*ier*dom, had actually seen dishonor in the society of Burns, and branded him with their veto; had, as we vulgarly say, cut him! We find one passage in this Work of Mr. Lockhart's, which will not out of our thoughts:

'A gentleman of that county, whose name I have already more than once had occasion to refer to, has often told me that he was seldom more grieved than when, riding into Dumfries one fine summer evening about this time to attend a county ball, he saw Burns walking alone, on the shady side of the principal street of the town, while the opposite side was gay with successive groups of gentlemen and ladies, all drawn together for the festivities of the night, not one of whom appeared willing to recognize him. The horseman dismounted, and joined Burns, who on his proposing to cross the street said: "Nay, nay, my young friend, that's all over now"; and quoted, after a pause, some verses of Lady Grizzel Baillie's pathetic ballad:

"His bonnet stood ance fu' fair on his brow,
His auld ane look'd better than mony ane's new;
But now he lets 't wear ony way it will hing,
And casts himsel dowie upon the corn-bing."

> " O, were we young as we ance hae been,
> We suld hae been galloping down on yon green,
> And linking° it ower the lily-white lea !
> And werena my heart light, I wad die."

It was little in Burns's character to let his feelings certain subjects escape in this fashion. He, immediately after reciting these verses, assumed the sprightliness of his most pleasing manner; and taking young friend home with him, entertained him very agreeably till the hour of the ball arrived.'

Alas! when we think that Burns now sleeps 'where bitter indignation can no longer lacerate his heart,[1] and that most of those fair dames and frizzled gentlemen already lie at his side, where the breastwork of gentility is quite thrown down, — who would not shed over the thin delusions and foolish toys that divide heart from heart, and make man unmerciful to his brother!

It was not now to be hoped that the genius of Burns would ever reach maturity, or accomplish aught worthy of itself. His spirit was jarred in its melody; not the soft breath of natural feeling, but the rude hand of Fate, was now sweeping over the strings. And yet what harmony was in him, what music even in his discords! How the wild tones had a charm for the simplest and the wisest; and all men felt and knew that here also was one of the Gifted! 'If he entered an inn at midnight, after all the inmates were in bed, the news of his arrival circulated from the cellar to the garret; and ere ten minutes had elapsed, the landlord and all his guests were assembled!' Some brief pure moments of poetic life were yet appointed him, in the composition of his Songs. We can understand how he grasped at this employment; and how too, he spurned all other reward for it but what the labor itself brought him. For the soul of Burns, though scathed and marred, was yet living in its full moral strength, though sharply conscious of its errors and abasement: and here, in his destitution and degradation, was one act of seeming nobleness and self-devotedness left even for him to perform. He felt too, that with all the 'thoughtless follies' that had 'laid him low,' the world was unjust and cruel to him; and he silently appealed to another and calmer time. Not as a hired soldier, but as a patriot, would he strive for the glory of his country: so he cast from him the poor sixpence a-day, and served zealously as a volunteer.° Let us not grudge him th last luxury of his existence; let him not have appeal to us in vain! The money was not necessary to hin he struggled through without it: long since, the guineas would have been gone; and now the hig mindedness of refusing them will plead for him i all hearts forever.

[1] Ubi sæva indignatio cor ulterius lacerare nequit. Swift's Epitaph.

We are here arrived at the crisis of Burns's life; f matters had now taken such a shape with him as coul not long continue. If improvement was not to l looked for, Nature could only for a limited time mai tain this dark and maddening warfare against th world and itself. We are not medically informe whether any continuance of years was, at this perio probable for Burns; whether his death is to be looke on as in some sense an accidental event, or only as th natural consequence of the long series of events tha had preceded. The latter seems to be the likelie opinion; and yet it is by no means a certain one. A all events, as we have said, some change could not b very distant. Three gates of deliverance, it seems t us, were open for Burns: clear poetical activity; ma ness; or death. The first, with longer life, was sti possible, though not probable; for physical caus were beginning to be concerned in it: and yet Bur had an iron resolution; could he but have seen and felt, that not only his highest glory, but his first duty, and the true medicine for all his woes, lay here. The second was still less probable; for his mind was ever among the clearest and firmest. So the milder third gate was opened for him: and he passed, not softly, yet speedily, into that still country, where the hail-storms and fire-showers do not reach, and the heaviest-laden wayfarer at length lays down his load!

Contemplating this sad end of Burns, and how he sank unaided by any real help, uncheered by any wise sympathy, generous minds have sometimes figured to themselves, with a reproachful sorrow, that much might have been done for him; that by counsel, true affection, and friendly ministrations, he might have been saved to himself and the world. We question whether there is not more tenderness of heart than soundness of judgment in these suggestions. It seems dubious to us whether the richest, wisest, most benevolent individual could have lent Burns any effectual help. Counsel, which seldom profits any one, he did not need; in his understanding, he knew the right from the wrong, as well perhaps as any man ever did; but the persuasion which would have availed him, lies not so much in the head as in the heart, where no ment or expostulation could have assisted mu implant it. As to money again, we do not b that this was his essential want; or well see ho private man could, even presupposing Burns's co have bestowed on him an independent fortune much prospect of decisive advantage. It is a m ing truth, that two men in any rank of society hardly be found virtuous enough to give mone to take it as a necessary gift, without injury t moral entireness of one or both. But so stand fact: Friendship, in the old heroic sense of that no longer exists; except in the cases of kindr other legal affinity, it is in reality no longer expect recognized as a virtue among men. A close ob of manners has pronounced 'Patronage,' that i cuniary or other economic furtherance, to be '

cursed'; ° cursing him that gives, and him that t
And thus, in regard to outward matters also, i become the rule, as in regard to inward it a was and must be the rule, that no one shall lo effectual help to another; but that each shall res tented with what help he can afford himself.
we say, is the principle of modern Honor; nat enough growing out of that sentiment of Pride,

we inculcate and encourage as the basis of our whole social morality. Many a poet has been poorer than Burns; but no one was ever prouder: we may question whether, without great precautions, even a pension from Royalty would not have galled and encumbered, more than actually assisted him.

Still less, therefore, are we disposed to join with another class of Burns's admirers, who accuse the higher ranks among us of having ruined Burns by their selfish neglect of him. We have already stated our doubts whether direct pecuniary help, had it been offered, would have been accepted, or could have proved very effectual. We shall readily admit, however, that much was to be done for Burns; that many a poisoned arrow might have been warded from his bosom; many an entanglement in his path cut asunder by the hand of the powerful; and light and heat, shed on him from high places, would have made his humble atmosphere more genial; and the softest heart then breathing might have lived and died with some fewer pangs. Nay, we shall grant farther, and for Burns it is granting much, that, with all his pride, he would have thanked, even with exaggerated gratitude, any one who had cordially befriended him: patronage,° unless once cursed, needed not to have been twice so. At all events, the poor promotion he desired in his calling might have been granted: it was his own scheme, therefore likelier than any other to be of service. All this it might have been a luxury, nay, it was a duty, for our nobility to have done. No part of all this, however, did any of them do; or apparently attempt, or wish to do: so much is granted against them. But what then is the amount of their blame? Simply that they were men of the world, and walked by the principles of such men; that they treated Burns, as other nobles and other commoners had done other poets; as the English did Shakespeare; as King Charles and his Cavaliers did Butler, as King Philip and his Grandees did Cervantes. Do men gather grapes of thorns; or shall we cut down our thorns for yielding only a fence and haws? How, indeed, could the 'nobility and gentry of his native land' hold out any help to this 'Scottish Bard, proud of his name and country'? Were the nobility and gentry so much as able rightly to help themselves? Had they not their game to preserve; their borough interests to strengthen; dinners, therefore, of various kinds to eat and give? Were their means more than adequate to all this business, or less than adequate? Less than adequate, in general; few of them in reality were richer than Burns;

y of them were poorer; for sometimes they had /ring their supplies, as with thumb-screws, from hard hand; and, in their need of guineas, to forget r duty of mercy; which Burns was never reduced
o. Let us pity and forgive them. The game they erved and shot, the dinners they ate and gave, the ugh interests they strengthened, the little Baby-they severally builded by the glory of their might, all melted or melting back into the primeval os, as man's merely selfish endeavors are fated to and here was an action, extending, in virtue of vorldly influence, we may say, through all time; irtue of its moral nature, beyond all time, being ortal as the Spirit of Goodness itself; this action offered them to do, and light was not given them o it. Let us pity and forgive them. But better pity, let us go and do otherwise. Human suffering not end with the life of Burns; neither was the mn mandate, 'Love one another, bear one another's lens,' given to the rich only, but to all men. True, shall find no Burns to relieve, to assuage by our or our pity; but celestial natures, groaning under fardels° of a weary life, we shall still find; and wretchedness which Fate has rendered voiceless tuneless, is not the least wretched, but the most.

Still, we do not think that the blame of Bu failure lies chiefly with the world. The wor seems to us, treated him with more rather than less kindness than it usually shows to such It has ever, we fear, shown but small favor Teachers: hunger and nakedness, perils and revi the prison, the cross, the poison-chalice have, in times and countries, been the market-price it offered for Wisdom, the welcome with which i greeted those who have come to enlighten and pu Homer and Socrates, and the Christian Apo belong to old days; but the world's Martyrology not completed with these. Roger Bacon° and Ga languish in priestly dungeons; Tasso° pines in cell of a madhouse; Camoens° dies begging o streets of Lisbon. So neglected, so 'persecuted the Prophets,' not in Judea only, but in all p where men have been. We reckon that every po Burns's order is, or should be, a prophet and te to his age; that he has no right to expect great ness from it, but rather is bound to do it great ness; that Burns, in particular, experienced full usual proportion of the world's goodness; and tha blame of his failure, as we have said, lies not ch with the world.

, then, does it lie? We are forced to answer: nself; it is his inward, not his outward mis- that bring him to the dust. Seldom, indeed, rwise; seldom is a life morally wrecked but l cause lies in some internal mal-arrangement, ıt less of good fortune than of good guidance. 'ashions no creature without implanting in it gth needful for its action and duration; least ːs she so neglect her masterpiece and darling, .c soul. Neither can we believe that it is in ːr of any external circumstances utterly to mind of a man; nay, if proper wisdom be m, even so much as to affect its essential nd beauty. The sternest sum-total of all misfortunes is Death; nothing more can lie p of human woe: yet many men, in all ages, .mphed over Death, and led it captive; con- .ts physical victory into a moral victory for ːes, into a seal and immortal consecration for ːheir past life had achieved. What has been ıy be done again: nay, it is but the degree ːhe kind of such heroism that differs in differ- ɪns; for without some portion of this spirit, ɪisterous daring, but of silent fearlessness, of .al in all its forms, no good man, in any time, has ever attained to be good.

We have already stated the error of Burns; and mourned over it, rather than blamed it. It was the want of unity in his purposes, of consistency in his aims; the hapless attempt to mingle in friendly union the common spirit of the world with the spirit of poetry, which is of a far different and altogether irreconcilable nature. Burns was nothing wholly, and Burns could be nothing, no man formed as he was can be anything, by halves. The heart, not of a mere hot-blooded, popular Versemonger, or poetical Restaurateur, but of a true Poet and Singer, worthy of the old religious heroic times, had been given him: and he fell in an age, not of heroism and religion, but of scepticism, selfishness and triviality, when true Nobleness was little understood, and its place supplied by a hollow, dissocial, altogether barren and unfruitful principle of Pride. The influences of that age, his open, kind, susceptible nature, to say nothing of his highly untoward situation, made it more than usually difficult for him to cast aside, or rightly subordinate; the better spirit that was within him ever sternly demanded its rights, its supremacy: he spent his life in endeavoring to reconcile these two; and lost it, as he must lose it, without reconciling them.

Burns was born poor; and born also to continue poor, for he would not endeavor to be otherwise; this it had been well could he have once for all admitted, and considered as finally settled. He was poor, truly; but hundreds even of his own class and order of minds have been poorer, yet have suffered nothing deadly from it: nay, his own Father had a far sorer battle with ungrateful destiny than his was; and he did not yield to it, but died courageously warring, and to all moral intents prevailing, against it. True, Burns had little means, had even little time for poetry, his only real pursuit and vocation; but so much the more precious was what little he had. In all these external respects his case was hard; but very far from the hardest. Poverty, incessant drudgery, and much worse evils, it has often been the lot of Poets and wise men to strive with, and their glory to conquer. Locke° was banished as a traitor; and wrote his Essay on the Human Understanding sheltering himself in a Dutch garret. Was Milton rich or at his ease when he composed Paradise Lost? Not only low, but fallen from a height: not only poor, but impoverished; in darkness and with dangers compassed round, he sang his immortal song, and found it audience, though few. Did not Cervantes finish his work, a maimed soldier and in prison? Nay was not the Araucana,° which Spain acknowledges a its Epic, written without even the aid of a paper; o scraps of leather, as the stout fighter and voyage snatched any moment from that wild warfare?

And what, then, had these men, which Burn wanted? Two things; both which, it seems to u are indispensable for such men. They had a tru religious principle of morals; and a single, not double aim in their activity. They were not sel seekers and self-worshippers; but seekers and wo shippers of something far better than Self. Nc personal enjoyment was their object; but a hig heroic idea of Religion, of Patriotism, of heaven Wisdom, in one or the other form, ever hovere before them; in which cause they neither shran from suffering, nor called on the earth to witness as something wonderful; but patiently endured, coun ing it blessedness enough so to spend and be spen Thus the 'golden-calf of Self-love,' however curious carved, was not their Deity; but the Invisible Goo ness, which alone is man's reasonable service. Th feeling was as a celestial fountain, whose strear refreshed into gladness and beauty all the provinc of their otherwise too desolate existence. In a wor they willed one thing, to which all other things were subordinated and made subservient: and therefore they accomplished it. The wedge will rend rocks; but its edge must be sharp and single: if it be double, the wedge is bruised in pieces, and will rend nothing.

Part of this superiority these men owed to their age; in which heroism and devotedness were still practised, or at least not yet disbelieved in: but much of it likewise they owed to themselves. With Burns, again, it was different. His morality, in most of its practical points, is that of a mere worldly man; enjoyment, in a finer or coarser shape, is the only thing he longs and strives for. A noble instinct sometimes raises him above this; but an instinct only, and acting only for moments. He has no Religion; in the shallow age, where his days were cast, Religion was not discriminated from the New and Old Light forms of Religion; and was, with these, becoming obsolete in the minds of men. His heart, indeed, is alive with a trembling adoration, but there is no temple in his understanding. He lives in darkness and in the shadow of doubt. His religion, at best, is an anxious wish; like that of Rabelais,° 'a great Perhaps.'

He loved Poetry warmly, and in his heart; could he but have loved it purely, and with his whole undivided heart, it had been well. For Poetry, as Burns could have followed it, is but another form of Wisdom, of Religion; is itself Wisdom and Religion. But this also was denied him. His poetry is a stray vagrant gleam, which will not be extinguished within him, yet rises not to be the true light of his path, but is often a wildfire that misleads him. It was not necessary for Burns to be rich, to be, or to seem, 'independent'; but it was necessary for him to be at one with his own heart; to place what was highest in his nature highest also in his life; 'to seek within himself for that consistency and sequence, which external events would forever refuse him.' He was born a poet; poetry was the celestial element of his being, and should have been the soul of his whole endeavors. Lifted into that serene ether, whither he had wings given him to mount, he would have needed no other elevation: poverty, neglect, and all evil, save the desecration of himself and his Art, were a small matter to him; the pride and the passions of the world lay far beneath his feet; and he looked down alike on noble and slave, on prince and beggar, and all that wore the stamp of man, with clear recognition, with brotherly affection, with sympathy, ith pity. Nay, we question whether for his culture s a Poet poverty and much suffering for a season rere not absolutely advantageous. Great men, in ooking back over their lives, have testified to that ffect. 'I would not for much,' says Jean Paul,° that I had been born richer.' And yet Paul's birth as poor enough; for, in another place, he adds: The prisoner's allowance is bread and water; and I ad often only the latter.' But the gold that is efined in the hottest furnace comes out the purest; r, as he has himself expressed it, 'the canary-bird ings sweeter the longer it has been trained in a arkened cage.'

A man like Burns might have divided his hours etween poetry and virtuous industry; industry which ll true feeling sanctions, nay prescribes, and which as a beauty, for that cause, beyond the pomp of hrones: but to divide his hours between poetry and ich men's banquets was an ill-starred and inauspi- ious attempt. How could he be at ease at such anquets? What had he to do there, mingling his nusic with the coarse roar of altogether earthly oices; brightening the thick smoke of intoxication vith fire lent him from heaven? Was it his aim to njoy life? To-morrow he must go drudge as an Exciseman! We wonder not that Burns became moody, indignant, and at times an offender against certain rules of society; but rather that he did not grow utterly frantic, and run amuck against them all. How could a man, so falsely placed, by his own or others' fault, ever know contentment or peaceable diligence for an hour? What he did, under such perverse guidance, and what he forbore to do, alike fill us with astonishment at the natural strength and worth of his character.

Doubtless there was a remedy for this perverseness; but not in others; only in himself; least of all in simple increase of wealth and worldly 'respectability.' We hope we have now heard enough about the efficacy of wealth for poetry, and to make poets happy. Nay, have we not seen another instance of it in these very days? Byron,° a man of an endowment considerably less ethereal than that of Burns, is born in the rank not of a Scottish ploughman, but of an English peer: the highest worldly honors, the fairest worldly career, are his by inheritance; the richest harvest of fame he soon reaps, in another province, by his own hand. And what does all this avail him? Is he happy, is he good, is he true? Alas, he has a poet's soul, and strives towards the Infinite and the ternal; and soon feels that all this is but mounting o the house-top to reach the stars! Like Burns, he s only a proud man; might, like him, have 'purhased a pocket-copy of Milton to study the character f Satan'; for Satan also is Byron's grand exemplar, he hero of his poetry, and the model apparently of is conduct. As in Burns's case too, the celestial eleent will not mingle with the clay of earth; both oet and man of the world he must not be; vulgar mbition will not live kindly with poetic Adoration; e cannot serve God and Mammon. Byron, like Burns, not happy; nay, he is the most wretched of all men His life is falsely arranged: the fire that is in him is ot a strong, still, central fire, warming into beauty he products of a world; but it is the mad fire of a olcano; and now—we look sadly into the ashes of crater, which ere long will fill itself with snow! Byron and Burns were sent forth as missionaries to heir generation, to teach it a higher Doctrine, a purer ruth; they had a message to deliver, which left hem no rest till it was accomplished; in dim throes f pain, this divine behest lay smouldering within hem; for they knew not what it meant, and felt it nly in mysterious anticipation, and they had to die ithout articulately uttering it. They are in the camp of the Unconverted; yet not as high messengers of rigorous though benignant truth, but as soft flattering singers, and in pleasant fellowship will they live there: they are first adulated, then persecuted; they accomplish little for others; they find no peace for themselves, but only death and the peace of the grave. We confess, it is not without a certain mournful awe that we view the fate of these noble souls, so richly gifted, yet ruined to so little purpose with all their gifts. It seems to us there is a stern moral taught in this piece of history, — twice told us in our own time! Surely to men of like genius, if there be any such, it carries with it a lesson of deep impressive significance. Surely it would become such a man, furnished for the highest of all enterprises, that of being the Poet of his Age, to consider well what it is that he attempts, and in what spirit he attempts it. For the words of Milton° are true in all times, and were never truer than in this: 'He who would write heroic poems must make his whole life a heroic poem.' If he cannot first so make his life, then let him hasten from this arena; for neither its lofty glories, nor its fearful perils, are for him. Let him dwindle into a modish balladmonger; let him worship and be-sing the idols of the time, and the time will not fail to reward him.

lf, indeed, he can endure to live in that capacity! Byron and Burns could not live as idol-priests, but the fire of their own hearts consumed them; and better it was for them that they could not. For it is not in the favor of the great or of the small, but in a life of truth, and in the inexpugnable citadel of his own soul, that a Byron's or a Burns's strength must lie. Let the great stand aloof from him, or know how to reverence him. Beautiful is the union of wealth with favor and furtherance for literature; like the costliest flower-jar enclosing the loveliest amaranth. Yet let not the relation be mistaken. A true poet is not one whom they can hire by money or flattery to be a minister of their pleasures, their writer of occasional verses, their purveyor of table-wit; he cannot be their menial, he cannot even be their partisan. At the peril of both parties, let no such union be attempted! Will a Courser of the Sun work softly in the harness of a Dray-horse? His hoofs are of fire, and his path is through the heavens, bringing light to all lands; will he lumber on mud highways, dragging pale for earthly appetites from door to door?

But we must stop short in these considerations, which would lead us to boundless lengths. We had something to say on the public moral character of

Burns; but this also we must forbear. We are far from regarding him as guilty before the world, as guiltier than the average; nay, from doubting that he is less guilty than one of ten thousand. Tried at a tribunal far more rigid than that where the Plebiscita° of common civic reputations are pronounced, he has seemed to us even there less worthy of blame than of pity and wonder. But the world is habitually unjust in its judgments of such men; unjust on many grounds, of which this one may be stated as the substance: It decides, like a court of law, by dead statutes; and not positively but negatively, less on what is done right, than on what is or is not done wrong. Not the few inches of deflection from the mathematical orbit, which are so easily measured, but the ratio of these to the whole diameter, constitutes the real aberration. This orbit may be a planet's, its diameter the breadth of the solar system; or it may be a city hippodrome; nay, the circle of a ginhorse, its diameter a score of feet or paces. But the inches of deflection only are measured: and it is assumed that the diameter of the ginhorse, and that of the planet, will yield the same ratio when compared with them! Here lies the root of many a blind, cruel condemnation of Burnses, Swifts, Rousseaus, which ne never listens to with approval. Granted, the hip comes into harbor with shrouds and tackle amaged; the pilot is blameworthy; he has not been ll-wise and all-powerful: but to know how blame-worthy, tell us first whether his voyage has been ound the Globe, or only to Ramsgate° and the Isle of Dogs°.

With our readers in general, with men of right feeling anywhere, we are not required to plead for Burns. n pitying admiration he lies enshrined in all our earts, in a far nobler mausoleum than that one of narble; neither will his Works, even as they are, ass away from the memory of men. While the hakespeares and Miltons roll on like mighty rivers hrough the country of Thought, bearing fleets of raffickers and assiduous pearl-fishers on their waves; his little Valclusa Fountain° will also arrest our eye: or this also is of Nature's own and most cunning orkmanship, bursts from the depths of the earth, rith a full gushing current, into the light of day; nd often will the traveller turn aside to drink of its lear waters, and muse among its rocks and pines!

POEMS FROM BURNS

THE COTTER'S SATURDAY NIGHT

INSCRIBED TO ROBERT AIKEN, ESQ., OF AYR

Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;
Nor Grandeur hear, with a disdainful smile,
The short and simple annals of the Poor.
—GRAY.

MY lov'd, my honor'd, much respected friend!
No mercenary bard his homage pays;
With honest pride, I scorn each selfish end,
My dearest meed, a friend's esteem and praise:
To you I sing, in simple Scottish lays,
The lowly train in life's sequester'd scene;
The native feelings strong, the guileless ways;
What Aiken in a cottage would have been;
Ah! tho' his worth unknown, far happier there, I ween.

November chill blaws loud wi' angry sugh;
The short'ning winter-day is near a close;

The miry beasts retreating frae the pleugh;
The black'ning trains o' craws to their repose:
The toil-worn Cotter frae his labor goes,
This night his weekly moil is at an end,
Collects his spades, his mattocks, and his hoes,
Hoping the morn in ease and rest to spend,
And weary, o'er the moor, his course does hame bend.

At length his lonely cot appears in view,
Beneath the shelter of an agèd tree;
Th' expectant wee-things, toddlin, stacher throug
To meet their 'dad,' wi' flichterin noise an' gle
His wee bit ingle, blinkin bonilie,
His clean hearth-stane, his thrifty wifie's smile
The lisping infant prattling on his knee,
Does a' his weary carking cares beguile,
An' makes him quite forget his labor an' his toil.

Belyve, the elder bairns come drapping in,
At service out, amang the farmers roun';
Some ca' the pleugh, some herd, some tentie rin
A cannie errand to a neibor town:
Their eldest hope, their Jenny, woman-grown,
In youthfu' bloom — love sparkling in her e'e - ıes hame, perhaps, to shew a braw new gown,

)r deposite her sair-won penny-fee, help her parents dear, if they in hardship be.

ith joy unfeign'd brothers and sisters meet,
An' each for other's weelfare kindly spiers:
ıe social hours, swift-wing'd, unnotic'd fleet;
Each tells the uncos that he sees or hears;
ıe parents, partial, eye their hopeful years;
Anticipation forward points the view;
ıe mother, wi' her needle an' her shears, Gars auld claes look amaist as weel's the new;
.e father mixes a' wi' admonition due.

ıeir master's an' their mistress's command,
The yunkers a' are warnèd to obey;
ı' mind their labors wi' an eydent hand,
An' ne'er, tho' out o' sight, to jauk or play;
ı' O! be sure to fear the Lord alway,
"An' mind your duty, duly, morn an' night!
st in temptation's path ye gang astray, Implore His counsel and assisting might:
ey never sought in vain that sought the Lord aright."

t hark! a rap comes gently to the door;
enny, wha kens the meaning o' the same.

Tells how a neibor lad cam o'er the moor,
To do some errands, and convoy her hame.
The wily mother sees the conscious flame
Sparkle in Jenny's e'e, and flush her cheek;
Wi' heart-struck anxious care, enquires his name,
While Jenny hafflins is afraid to speak;
Weel-pleas'd the mother hears, it's nae wild, worth rake.

Wi' kindly welcome, Jenny brings him ben;
A strappin' youth, he takes the mother's eye;
Blythe Jenny sees the visit's no ill ta'en;
The father cracks of horses, pleughs, and kye.
The youngster's artless heart o'erflows wi' joy,
But blate an' laithfu', scarce can weel behave;
The mother, wi' a woman's wiles, can spy
What makes the youth sae bashfu' an' sae grave Weel-pleas'd to think her bairn's respected like lave.

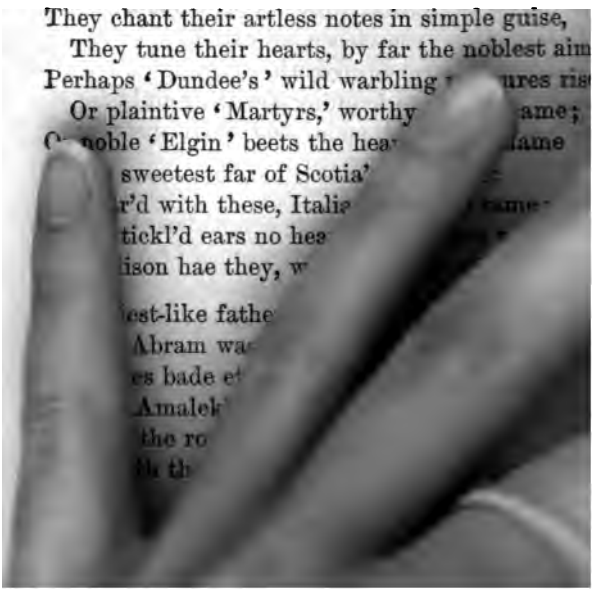
O happy love! where love like this is found!
O heart-felt raptures! bliss beyond compare!
I've pacèd much this weary, mortal round,
And sage experience bids me this declare,—
"If Heaven a draught of heavenly pleasure spare,
One cordial in this melancholy vale,

'Tis when a youthful, loving, modest pair,
In other's arms breathe out the tender tale,
Beneath the milk-white thorn that scents the ev'ning gale."

Is there, in human form, that bears a heart—
A wretch! a villain! lost to love and truth!
That can, with studied, sly, ensnaring art,
Betray sweet Jenny's unsuspecting youth?
Curse on his perjur'd arts! dissembling smooth!
Are honor, virtue, conscience, all exil'd?
Is there no pity, no relenting ruth,
Points to the parents fondling o'er their child?
Then paints the ruin'd maid, and their distraction wild?

But now the supper crowns their simple board,
The halsome parritch, chief o' Scotia's food;
The sowpe their only hawkie does afford,
That 'yont the hallan snugly chows her cood:
The dame brings forth, in complimental mood,
To grace the lad, her weel-hain'd kebbuck, fell;
An' aft he's prest, an' aft he ca's it guid;
The frugal wifie, garrulous, will tell,
How 'twas a towmond auld, sin' lint was i' the bell.

The cheerfu' supper done, wi' serious face,
They, round the ingle, form a circle wide;
The sire turns o'er, wi' patriarchal grace,
The big ha'-Bible, ance his father's pride:
His bonnet rev'rently is laid aside,
His lyart haffets wearing thin an' bare;
Those strains that once did sweet in Zion glide,
He wales a portion with judicious care,
And "Let us worship God!" he says, with solem



Or Job's pathetic plaint, and wailing cry;
Or rapt Isaiah's wild, seraphic fire;
Or other holy Seers that tune the sacred lyre.

Perhaps the Christian volume is the theme,
How guiltless blood for guilty man was shed;
How He, who bore in Heaven the second name,
Had not on earth whereon to lay His head:
How His first followers and servants sped;
The precepts sage they wrote to many a land:
How he, who lone in Patmos banishèd,
Saw in th[illegible]n a mighty angel stand;
hear[illegible]t Bab'lon's doom pronounc'd!
Hea[illegible]mand.

n kn[illegible]wn, to Heaven's Eternal King,
The s[illegible]father[illegible]d the husband prays:
ope "[illegible]culti[illegible]riumphant wile"
Tha[illegible]et in ther[illegible]rays.

When men display to congregations wide
  Devotion's ev'ry grace, except the heart!
The Power, incens'd, the pageant will desert,
  The pompous strain, the sacerdotal stole;
But haply, in some cottage far apart,
  May hear, well pleas'd, the language of the soul;
And in his Book of Life the inmates poor enrol.

Then homeward all take off their sev'ral way;
  The youngling cottagers retire to rest:
The parent-pair their secret homage pay,
  And proffer up to Heav'n the warm request,
That He who stills the raven's clam'rous nest,
  And decks the lily fair in flow'ry pride,
Would, in the way His wisdom sees the best,
  For them and for their little ones provide;
But chiefly, in their hearts with grace divine presid

From scenes like these old Scotia's grandeur spring
  That makes her lov'd at home, rever'd abroad:
Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
  "An honest man's the noblest work of God:"
And certes, in fair virtue's heavenly road,
  The cottage leaves the palace far behind;
What is a lordling's pomp? a cumbrous load,

Disguising oft the wretch of human kind,
Studied in arts of hell, in wickedness refin'd!

O Scotia! my dear, my native soil!
For whom my warmest wish to Heaven is sent,
Long may thy hardy sons of rustic toil
Be blest with health, and peace, and sweet content!
And, Oh, may Heaven their simple lives prevent
From luxury's contagion, weak and vile!
Then, howe'er crowns and coronets be rent,
A virtuous populace may rise the while,
And stand a wall of fire around their much-lov'd Isle.

O Thou! who pour'd the patriotic tide,
That stream'd thro' Wallace's undaunted heart,
Who dar'd to, nobly, stem tyrannic pride,
Or nobly die, the second glorious part:
(The patriot's God, peculiarly thou art,
His friend, inspirer, guardian, and reward!)
O never, never, Scotia's realm desert;
But still the patriot, and the patriot-bard
In bright succession raise, her ornament and guard!

MAN WAS MADE TO MOURN

A DIRGE

When chill November's surly blast
Made fields and forests bare,
One ev'ning as I wandér'd forth
Along the banks of Ayr,
I spy'd a man, whose agèd step
Seem'd weary, worn with care;
His face was furrow'd o'er with years,
And hoary was his hair.

Young stranger, whither wand'rest thou?
Began the rev'rend sage;
Does thirst of wealth thy step constrain,
Or youthful pleasure's rage?
Or, haply, prest with cares and woes
Too soon thou hast began
To wander forth, with me, to mourn
The miseries of man.

The sun that overhangs yon moors,
Out-spreading far and wide,
Where hundreds labor to support
A haughty lordling's pride;

I've seen yon weary winter sun
  Twice forty times return:
And ev'ry time has added proofs,
  That man was made to mourn.

O man! while in thy early years,
  How prodigal of time!
Mis-spending all thy precious hours,
  Thy glorious youthful prime!
Alternate follies take the sway;
  Licentious passions burn;
Which tenfold force give nature's law,
  That man was made to mourn.

Look not alone on youthful prime,
  Or manhood's active might;
Man then is useful to his kind,
  Supported in his right,
But see him on the edge of life,
  With cares and sorrows worn,
Then age and want, Oh! ill-match'd pair!
  Show man was made to mourn.

A few seem favorites of fate,
  In pleasure's lap carest;
Yet, think not all the rich and great

Are likewise truly blest.
But, Oh! what crowds in ev'ry land
Are wretched and forlorn;
Thro' weary life this lesson learn,
That man was made to mourn.

Many and sharp the num'rous ills
Inwoven with our frames!
More pointed still we make ourselves,
Regret, remorse, and shame!
And man, whose heaven-erected face
The smiles of love adorn,
Man's inhumanity to man
Makes countless thousands mourn!

See yonder poor, o'erlabor'd wight,
So abject, mean, and vile,
Who begs a brother of the earth
To give him leave to toil;
And see his lordly fellow-worm
The poor petition spurn,
Unmindful, tho' a weeping wife
And helpless off-spring mourn.

If I'm design'd yon lordling's slave,
By nature's law design'd,

Why was an independent wish
  E'er planted in my mind?
If not, why am I subject to His cruelty, or scorn?
Or why has man the will and pow'r
  To make his fellow mourn?

Yet, let not this too much, my son,
  Disturb thy youthful breast;
This partial view of human-kind
  Is surely not the last!
The poor, oppressèd, honest man,
  Had never, sure, been born,
Had there not been some recompense
  To comfort those that mourn!

O death! the poor man's dearest friend,
  The kindest and the best!
Welcome the hour my agèd limbs
  Are laid with thee at rest!
The great, the wealthy, fear thy blow,
  From pomp and pleasures torn;
But, Oh! a blest relief to those
  That weary-laden mourn!

Then sore harass'd, and tir'd at last, with fortune's vain delusion; O
I dropt my schemes, like idle dreams, and came to this conclusion; O
The past was bad, and the future hid; its good or ill untrièd; O
But the present hour was in my pow'r, and so I would enjoy it, O.

No help, nor hope, nor view had I; nor person to befriend me; O
So I must toil, and sweat and broil, and labor to sustain me, O
To plough and sow, to reap and mow, my father bred me early; O
For one, he said, to labor bred, was a match for fortune fairly, O.

Thus all obscure, unknown, and poor, thro' life I'm doom'd to wander, O
Till down my weary bones I lay in everlasting slumber; O
No view nor care, but shun whate'er might breed me pain or sorrow; O
I live to-day as well's I may, regardless of to-morrow, O.

ut cheerful still, I am as well as a monarch in a palace, O ho' fortune's frown still hunts me down, with all her wonted malice; O make indeed my daily bread, but ne'er can make it farther; O ut as daily bread is all I need, I do not much regard her, O.

Vhen sometimes by my labor I earn a little money, O ome unforeseen misfortune comes gen'rally upon me; O ischance, mistake, or by neglect, or my good-natur'd folly; O ut come what will, I've sworn it still, I'll ne'er be melancholy, O.

ll you who follow wealth and power, with unremitting ardor, O
he more in this you look for bliss, you leave your view the farther; O ad you the wealth Potosi boasts, or nations to adore you, O cheerful honest-hearted clown I will prefer before you, O.

THE AULD FARMER'S NEW-YEAR MORNING SALUTATION TO HIS AULD MARE MAGGIE,

ON GIVING HER THE ACCUSTOMED RIPP OF CORN TO HANSEL IN THE NEW YEAR

A GUID New-Year I wish thee, Maggie!
Hae, there's a ripp to thy auld baggie:
Tho' thou's howe-backit, now, an' knaggie,
I've seen the day,
Thou could hae gone like ony staggie
Out-owre the lay.

Tho' now thou's dowie, stiff, an' crazy,
An' thy auld hide's as white's a daisie,
I've seen thee dappl't, sleek an' glaizie,
A bonie gray:
He should been tight that daur't to raize thee,
Ance in a day.

Thou ance was i' the foremost rank,
A filly buirdly, steeve, an' swank,
An' set weel down a shapely shank,
As e'er tread yird;

An' could hae flown out-owre a stank,
Like ony bird.

It's now some nine-an'-twenty year,
Sin' thou was my guid-father's meere;
He gied me thee, o' tocher clear,
An' fifty mark;
Tho' it was sma', 'twas weel-won gear,
An' thou was stark.

When first I gaed to woo my Jenny,
Ye then was trottin wi' your minnie:
Tho' ye was trickie, slee, an' funnie,
Ye ne'er was donsie;
But hamely, tawie, quiet, an' cannie,
An unco sonsie.

That day, ye pranc'd wi' muckle pride,
When ye bure hame my bonie bride;
An' sweet an' gracefu' she did ride,
Wi' maiden air!
Kyle-Stewart I could bragged wide,
For sic a pair.

Tho' now ye dow but hoyte and hoble
An' wintle like a saumont-coble,

That day ye was a jinker noble
For heels an' win'!
An' ran them till they a' did wauble,
Far, far behin'.

When thou an' I were young and skeigh,
An' stable-meals at fairs were driegh,
How thou wad prance, an' snore, an' skriegh
An' tak the road!
Town's-bodies ran, and stood abeigh,
An' ca't thee mad.

When thou was corn't, an' I was mellow,
We took the road ay like a swallow:
At brooses thou had ne'er a fellow,
For pith an' speed;
But ev'ry tail thou pay't them hollow,
Whare'er thou gaed.

The sma', droop-rumpl't, hunter cattle,
Might aiblins waur't thee for a brattle;
But sax Scotch miles thou try't their mettle,
An' gart them whaizle:
Nae whip nor spur, but just a wattle
O' saugh or hazel.

Thou was a noble fittie-lan',
As e'er in tug or tow was drawn!
Aft thee an' I, in aught hours gaun,
On guid March-weather
Hae turn'd sax rood beside our han',
For days thegither.

Thou never braindg't, an' fetch't, an' fliskit,
But thy auld tail thou wad hae whiskit
An' spread abreed thy weel-fill'd briskit,
Wi' pith an' pow'r,
Till spritty knowes wad rair't and riskit,
An' slypet owre.

When frosts lay lang, an' snaws were deep,
An' threaten'd labor back to keep,
I gied thy cog a wee-bit heap
Aboon the timmer;
I ken'd my Maggie wad na sleep
For that, or simmer.

In cart or car thou never reestit;
The steyest brae thou wad hae face't it;
Thou never lap, an' sten't, and breastit,
Then stood to blaw;

But just thy step a wee thing hastit,
Thou snoov't awa.

My pleugh is now thy bairn-time a':
Four gallant brutes as e'er did draw;
Forbye sax mae, I've sell't awa,
That thou hast nurst:
They drew me thretteen pund an' twa,
The vera warst.

Monie a sair daurk we twa hae wrought,
An' wi' the weary warl' fought!
An' monie an anxious day, I thought
We wad be beat!
Yet here to crazy age we're brought,
Wi' something yet.

And think na, my auld, trusty servan',
That now perhaps thou's less deservin,
An' thy auld days may end in starvin,
For my last fou,
A heapit stimpart, I'll reserve ane
Laid by for you.

We've worn to crazy years thegither;
We'll toyte about wi' ane anither;

Wi' tentie care I'll flit thy tether
To some hain'd rig,
Whare ye may nobly rax your leather,
Wi' sma' fatigue.

TO A MOUSE

ON TURNING HER UP IN HER NEST WITH THE PLOUGH, NOVEMBER, 1785

Wee, sleekit, cow'rin, tim'rous beastie,
O, what a panic's in thy breastie!
Thou need na start awa sae hasty,
Wi' bickering brattle!
I wad be laith to rin an' chase thee,
Wi' murd'ring pattle!

I'm truly sorry man's dominion
Has broken Nature's social union,
An' justifies that ill opinion,
Which makes thee startle,
At me, thy poor, earth-born companion,
An' fellow-mortal!

I doubt na, whiles, but thou may thieve;
What then? poor beastie, thou maun live!

A daimen-icker in a thrave
'S a sma' request:
I'll get a blessin wi' the lave,
And never miss't!

Thy wee bit housie, too, in ruin!
Its silly wa's the win's are strewin!
An' naething, now, to big a new ane,
O' foggage green!
An' bleak December's winds ensuin,
Baith snell an' keen!

Thou saw the fields laid bare and waste,
An' weary winter comin fast,
An' cozie here, beneath the blast,
Thou thought to dwell,
Till crash! the cruel coulter past,
Out thro' thy cell.

That wee bit heap o' leaves an' stibble,
Has cost thee mony a weary nibble!
Now thou's turn'd out, for a' thy trouble
But house or hald,
To thole the winter's sleety dribble,
An' cranreuch cauld!

But, Mousie, thou art no thy lane,
In proving foresight may be vain:
The best laid schemes o' mice an' men
Gang aft a-gley,
An' lea'e us nought but grief an' pain,
For promis'd joy.

Still thou art blest, compar'd wi' me!
The present only toucheth thee:
But, Och! I backward cast my e'e
On prospects drear!
An' forward, tho' I canna see,
I guess an' fear!

IN SEEING A WOUNDED HARE LIMP BY ME, WHICH A FELLOW HAD JUST SHOT

INHUMAN man! curse on thy barb'rous art,
And blasted be thy murder-aiming eye;
May never pity soothe thee with a sigh,
Nor ever pleasure glad thy cruel heart!

Go, live, poor wanderer of the wood and field,
The bitter little that of life remains;

No more the thickening brakes and verdant plains
To thee shall home, or food, or pastime yield.

Seek, mangled wretch, some place of wonted rest,
No more of rest, but now thy dying bed!
The sheltering rushes whistling o'er thy head,
The cold earth with thy bloody bosom prest.

Oft as by winding Nith, I, musing, wait
The sober eve, or hail the cheerful dawn,
I'll miss thee sporting o'er the dewy lawn,
And curse the ruffian's aim, and mourn thy hapless fate.

POOR MAILIE'S ELEGY

LAMENT in rhyme, lament in prose,
Wi' saut tears trickling down your nose;
Our Bardie's fate is at a close,
Past a' remead;
The last, sad cape-stane of his woes;
Poor Mailie's dead!

It's no the loss o' warl's gear,
That could sae bitter draw the tear,

Or mak our Bardie, dowie, wear
The mournin weed:
He's lost a friend and neibor dear,
In Mailie dead.

Thro' a' the toun she trotted by him;
A lang half-mile she could descry him;
Wi' kindly bleat, when she did spy him,
She ran wi' speed:
A friend mair faithfu' ne'er cam nigh him,
Than Mailie dead.

I wat she was a sheep o' sense,
An' could behave hersel wi' mense;
I'll say't, she never brak a fence,
Thro' thievish greed.
Our Bardie, lanely, keeps the spence
Sin' Mailie's dead.

Or, if he wanders up the howe
Her living image in her yowe
Comes bleating to him, owre the knowe,
For bits o' bread;
An' down the briny pearls rowe
For Mailie dead.

She was nae get o' moorland tips,
Wi' tawted ket, an' hairy hips;
For her forbears were brought in ships,
Frae yont the Tweed:
A bonier fleesh ne'er cross'd the clips
Than Mailie's dead.

Wae worth the man wha first did shape
That vile, wanchancie thing — a rape!
It maks guid fellows grin an' gape,
Wi' chokin dread;
An' Robin's bonnet wave wi' crape,
For Mailie dead.

O, a' ye Bards on bonie Doon!
An' wha on Ayr your chanters tune!
Come, join the melancholious croon
O' Robin's reed!
His heart will never get aboon!
His Mailie's dead!

A WINTER NIGHT

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you,
From seasons such as these?

—SHAKESPEARE.

WHEN biting Boreas, fell and doure,
Sharp shivers thro' the leafless bow'r;
When Phœbus gies a short-liv'd glow'r,
Far south the lift,
Dim-dark'ning thro' the flaky show'r,
Or whirling drift:

Ae night the storm the steeples rocked,
Poor Labor sweet in sleep was locked,
While burns, wi' snawy wreeths up-choked,
Wild-eddying swirl,
Or thro' the mining outlet bocked,
Down headlong hurl.

List'ning, the doors an' winnocks rattle,
I thought me on the ourie cattle,
Or silly sheep, wha bide this brattle
O' winter war,

And thro' the drift, deep-lairing, sprattle,
Beneath a scar.

Ilk happing bird, wee, helpless thing!
That, in the merry months o' spring,
Delighted me to hear thee sing,
What comes o' thee?
Whare wilt thou cow'r thy chittering wing
An' close thy e'e?

Ev'n you on murd'ring errands toil'd,
Lone from your savage homes exil'd,
The blood-stain'd roost, and sheep-cote spoil'd
My heart forgets,
While pityless the tempest wild
Sore on you beats.

Now Phœbe, in her midnight reign,
Dark muffled, view'd the dreary plain;
Still crowding thoughts, a pensive train,
Rose in my soul,
When on my ear this plaintive strain,
Slow, solemn, stole —

"Blow, blow, ye winds, with heavier gust!
And freeze, thou bitter-biting frost!

Descend, ye chilly, smothering snows!
Not all your rage, as now, united shows
More hard unkindness, unrelenting,
Vengeful malice, unrepenting,
Than heav'n-illumin'd man on brother man bestows!

See stern Oppression's iron grip,
Or mad Ambition's gory hand,
Sending, like blood-hounds from the slip
Woe, want, and murder o'er a land!
Ev'n in the peaceful rural vale,
Truth, weeping, tells the mournful tale,
How pamper'd Luxury, Flatt'ry by her side,
The parasite empoisoning her ear,
With all the servile wretches in the rear,
Looks o'er proud property, extended wide;
And eyes the simple rustic hind,
Whose toil upholds the glitt'ring show,
A creature of another kind,
Some coarser substance, unrefin'd,
Plac'd for her lordly use thus far, thus vile, below.

"Where, where is Love's fond, tender throe,
With lordly Honor's lofty brow,
The pow'rs you proudly own?
Is there, beneath Love's noble name,

Can harbor, dark, the selfish aim,
To bless himself alone!
Mark maiden-innocence a prey
To love-pretending snares,
This boasted honor turns away,
Shunning soft pity's rising sway,
Regardless of the tears, and unavailing pray'rs
Perhaps this hour, in mis'ry's squalid nest,
She strains your infant to her joyless breast,
And with a mother's fears shrinks at the rocking bla

"Oh ye! who, sunk in beds of down,
Feel not a want but what yourselves create Think, for a moment, on his wretched fate,
Whom friends and fortune quite disown!
Ill-satisfied keen nature's clam'rous call,
Stretch'd on his straw he lays himself to sle
While thro' the ragged roof and chinky wall,
Chill o'er his slumbers, piles the drifty heap
Think on the dungeon's grim confine,
Where guilt and poor misfortune pine
Guilt, erring man, relenting view!
But shall thy legal rage pursue
The wretch, already crushèd low,
By cruel fortune's undeservèd blow?

Affliction's sons are brothers in distress;
A brother to relieve, how exquisite the bliss!

I heard nae mair, for Chanticleer
Shook off the pouthery snaw,
And hail'd the morning with a cheer,
A cottage-rousing craw.

But deep this truth impress'd my mind
Thro' all His works abroad,
The heart benevolent and kind
The most resembles God.

WINTER

A DIRGE

THE wintry west extends his blast,
And hail and rain does blaw;
Or the stormy north sends driving forth
The blinding sleet and snaw:
While, tumbling brown, the burn comes down,
And roars frae bank to brae:
And bird and beast in covert rest,
And pass the heartless day.

"The sweeping blast, the sky o'ercast,"
The joyless winter day,
Let others fear, to me more dear
Than all the pride of May:
The tempest's howl, it soothes my soul,
My griefs it seems to join;
The leafless trees my fancy please,
Their fate resembles mine!

Thou Pow'r Supreme, whose mighty scheme
These woes of mine fulfil,
Here, firm, I rest, they must be best,
Because they are Thy will!
Then all I want (Oh! do thou grant
This one request of mine!)
Since to enjoy thou dost deny,
Assist me to resign.

TO A MOUNTAIN DAISY

ON TURNING ONE DOWN WITH THE PLOUGH, IN APRIL. 1786

Wee, modest, crimson-tippèd flow'r,
Thou's met me in an evil hour;
For I maun crush amang the stoure
Thy slender stem.

To spare thee now is past my pow'r,
Thou bonie gem.

Alas! it's no thy neibor sweet,
The bonnie lark, companion meet!
Bending thee 'mang the dewy weet!
Wi' spreckl'd breast,
When upward-springing, blythe, to greet
The purpling east.

Cauld blew the bitter-biting north
Upon thy early, humble birth;
Yet cheerfully thou glinted forth
Amid the storm,
Scarce rear'd above the parent-earth
Thy tender form.

The flaunting flow'rs our gardens yield,
High shelt'ring woods and wa's maun shield,
But thou, beneath the random bield
O' clod or stane,
Adorns the histie stibble-field,
Unseen, alane.

There, in thy scanty mantle clad,
Thy snawie bosom sun-ward spread,

Thou lifts thy unassuming head
In humble guise;
But now the share uptears thy bed,
And low thou lies!

Such is the fate of artless maid,
Sweet flow'ret of the rural shade!
By love's simplicity betray'd,
And guileless trust,
Till she, like thee, all soil'd, is laid
Low i' the dust.

Such is the fate of simple bard,
On life's rough ocean luckless starr'd!
Unskilful he to note the card
Of prudent lore,
Till billows rage, and gales blow hard,
And whelm him o'er!

Such fate to suffering worth is giv'n,
Who long with wants and woes has striv'n
By human pride or cunning driv'n
To mis'ry's brink,
Till wrench'd of ev'ry stay but Heav'n,
He ruin'd, sink!

Ev'n thou who mourn'st the Daisy's fate,
That fate is thine — no distant date;
Stern Ruin's ploughshare drives, elate,
Full on thy bloom,
Till crush'd beneath the furrow's weight,
Shall be thy doom!

AFTON WATER

ow gently, sweet Afton, among thy green braes, ow gently, I'll sing thee a song in thy praise;
y Mary's asleep by thy murmuring stream,
ow gently, sweet Afton, disturb not her dream.

ou stock-dove whose echo resounds thro' the glen,
e wild whistling blackbirds in yon thorny den,
ou green-crested lapwing, thy screaming forbear, charge you disturb not my slumbering fair.

ow lofty, sweet Afton, thy neighboring hills,
r mark'd with the courses of clear, winding rills;
ere daily I wander as noon rises high,
y flocks and my Mary's sweet cot in my eye.

ow pleasant thy banks and green valleys below,
here wild in the woodlands the primroses blow;

There oft as mild ev'ning weeps over the lea,
The sweet-scented birk shades my Mary and me.

Thy crystal stream, Afton, how lovely it glides,
And winds by the cot where my Mary resides;
How wanton thy waters her snowy feet lave,
As gathering sweet flow'rets she stems thy clear wave.

Flow gently, sweet Afton, among thy green braes,
Flow gently, sweet river, the theme of my lays;
My Mary's asleep by thy murmuring stream,
Flow gently, sweet Afton, disturb not her dream.

THE BANKS O' DOON

TUNE — "The Caledonian Hunt's Delight"

YE banks and braes o' bonie Doon,
How can ye bloom sae fresh and fair?
How can ye chant, ye little birds,
And I sae weary fu' o' care!
Thou'lt break my heart, thou warbling bird,
That wantons thro' the flowering thorn:
Thou minds me o' departed joys,
Departed — never to return.

Aft hae I rov'd by bonie Doon,
To see the rose and woodbine twine;
And ilka bird sang o' its Luve,
And fondly sae did I o' mine;
Wi' lightsome heart I pu'd a rose,
Fu' sweet upon its thorny tree!
And my fause Luver staw my rose,
But ah! he left the thorn wi' me.

DUNCAN GRAY

Duncan Gray cam here to woo,
Ha, ha, the wooing o't,
On blythe yule night when we were fou,
Ha, ha, the wooing o't.
Maggie coost her head fu high,
Look'd asklent and unco skeigh,
Gart poor Duncan stand abeigh,
Ha, ha, the wooing o't.

Duncan fleech'd, and Duncan pray'd,
Ha, ha, &c.
Meg was deaf as Ailsa Craig,
Ha, ha, &c.
Duncan sigh'd baith out and in,

Grat his een baith bleer't and blin',
Spak o' lowpin o'er a linn;
Ha, ha, &c.

Time and chance are but a tide,
Ha, ha, &c.
Slighted love is sair to bide,
Ha, ha, &c.
Shall I, like a fool, quoth he,
For a haughty hizzie die?
She may gae to — France for me!
Ha, ha, &c.

How it comes let doctors tell,
Ha, ha, &c.
Meg grew sick, as he grew well,
Ha, ha, &c.
Something in her bosom wrings,
For relief a sigh she brings;
And O, her een, they spak sic things!
Ha, ha, &c.

Duncan was a lad o' grace,
Ha, ha, &c.
Maggie's was a piteous case,
Ha, ha, &c.

Duncan couldna be her death,
Swelling pity smoor'd his wrath;
Now they're crouse and cantie baith;
Ha, ha, the wooing o't.

AULD LANG SYNE

Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
And never brought to min'?
Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
And auld lang syne?

CHORUS.

For auld lang syne, my dear,
For auld lang syne,
We'll tak a cup o' kindness yet,
For auld lang syne.

We twa hae run about the braes,
And pu'd the gowans fine,
But we've wander'd mony a weary foot
Sin' auld lang syne.
For auld, &c.

We twa hae paidl't i' the burn,
From morning sun till dine;

But seas between us braid hae roar'd
Sin' auld lang syne.
For auld, &c.

And here's a hand, my trusty fier,
And gie's a hand o' thine;
And we'll tak a right guid-willie waught,
For auld lang syne.
For auld, &c.

HIGHLAND MARY

TUNE—"Katherine Ogie"

YE banks, and braes, and streams around
The castle o' Montgomery!
Green be your woods, and fair your flowers,
Your waters never drumly:
There simmer first unfauld her robes,
And there the langest tarry;
For there I took the last fareweel
O' my sweet Highland Mary.

How sweetly bloom'd the gay green birk,
How rich the hawthorn's blossom,

As underneath their fragrant shade,
I clasp'd her to my bosom!
The golden hours, on angel wings,
Flew o'er me and my dearie;
For dear to me, as light and life,
Was my sweet Highland Mary.

Wi' mony a vow, and lock'd embrace,
Our parting was fu' tender;
And, pledging aft to meet again,
We tore oursels asunder;
But oh! fell death's untimely frost,
That nipt my flower sae early!
Now green's the sod, and cauld's the clay,
That wraps my Highland Mary.

O pale, pale now, those rosy lips,
I aft hae kiss'd sae fondly!
And closed for aye the sparkling glance,
That dwelt on me sae kindly!
And mould'ring now in silent dust,
That heart that lo'ed me dearly!
But still within my bosom's core
Shall live my Highland Mary.

TO MARY IN HEAVEN

TUNE—"Miss Forbes' farewell to Banff"

THOU lingering star, with less'ning ray,
  Thou lov'st to greet the early morn,
Again thou usher'st in the day
  My Mary from my soul was torn.
O Mary! dear departed shade!
  Where is thy place of blissful rest?
Seest thou thy lover lowly laid?
  Hear'st thou the groans that rend his breast?

That sacred hour can I forget?
  Can I forget the hallow'd grove,
Where by the winding Ayr we met,
  To live one day of parting love?
Eternity will not efface
  Those records dear of transports past;
Thy image at our last embrace;
  Ah! little thought we 'twas our last!

Ayr gurgling kiss'd his pebbled shore,
  O'erhung with wild woods, thick'ning green;
The fragrant birch, and hawthorn hoar,
  Twin'd am'rous round the raptur'd scene.
The flowers sprang wanton to be prest,

The birds sang love on ev'ry spray,
Till too, too soon, the glowing west
Proclaim'd the speed of wingèd day.

Still o'er these scenes my mem'ry wakes,
And fondly broods with miser care!
Time but the impression deeper makes,
As streams their channels deeper wear.
My Mary, dear departed shade!
Where is thy place of blissful rest?
Seest thou thy lover lowly laid?
Hear'st thou the groans that rend his breast?

ODE, SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF MRS. OSWALD

Dweller in yon dungeon dark,
Hangman of creation! mark,
Who in widow-weeds appears,
Laden with unhonor'd years,
Noosing with care a bursting purse,
Baited with many a deadly curse?

STROPHE

View the wither'd beldam's face —
Can thy keen inspection trace

Aught of humanity's sweet melting grace?
Note that eye, 'tis rheum o'erflows,
Pity's flood there never rose.
See those hands, ne'er stretch'd to save,
Hands that took — but never gave.
Keeper of Mammon's iron chest,
Lo, there she goes, unpitied and unblest
She goes, but not to realms of everlasting rest!

ANTISTROPHE

Plunderer of armies, lift thine eyes,
(A while forbear, ye tort'ring fiends,)
Seest thou whose step unwilling hither bends?
No fallen angel, hurl'd from upper skies;
'Tis thy trusty quondam mate,
Doom'd to share thy fiery fate,
She, tardy, hell-ward plies.

EPODE

And are they of no more avail,
Ten thousand glitt'ring pounds a year?
In other worlds can Mammon fail,
Omnipotent as he is here?
O, bitter mock'ry of the pompous bier,
While down the wretched vital part is driv'n!

The cave-lodg'd beggar, with a conscience clear,
Expires in rags, unknown, and goes to Heav'n.

MY NANNIE'S AWA

TUNE — "There'll never be peace till Jamie comes hame"

Now in her green mantle blythe Nature arrays,
And listens the lambkins that bleat o'er the braes,
While birds warble welcomes in ilka green shaw;
But to me it's delightless — my Nannie's awa.

The snaw-drop and primrose our woodlands adorn,
And violets bathe in the weet o' the morn:
They pain my sad bosom, sae sweetly they blaw,
They mind me o' Nannie — my Nannie's awa.

Thou laverock that springs frae the dews o' the lawn,
The shepherd to warn o' thé gray-breaking dawn,
And thou, yellow mavis, that hails the night-fa',
Gie over for pity — my Nannie's awa.

Come autumn sae pensive, in yellow and gray,
And soothe me wi' tidings o' Nature's decay;
The dark, dreary winter, and wild-driving snaw,
Alane can delight me — now Nannie's awa.

O, WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST

TUNE—"The Lass of Livingstone"

O, WERT thou in the cauld blast,
On yonder lea, on yonder lea,
My plaidie to the angry airt,
I'd shelter thee, I'd shelter thee.
Or did misfortune's bitter storms
Around thee blaw, around thee blaw,
Thy bield should be my bosom,
To share it a', to share it a'.

Or were I in the wildest waste,
Of earth and air, of earth and air,
The desert were a paradise,
If thou wert there, if thou wert there.
Or were I monarch o' the globe,
Wi' thee to reign, wi' thee to reign,
The only jewel in my crown
Wad be my queen, wad be my queen.

JOHN ANDERSON MY JO

JOHN ANDERSON my jo, John,
When we were first acquent,

Your locks were like the raven,
Your bonie brow was brent;
But now your brow is beld, John,
Your locks are like the snaw;
But blessings on your frosty pow,
John Anderson my jo.

John Anderson my jo, John,
We clamb the hill thegither;
And monie a cantie day, John,
We've had wi' ane anither:
Now we maun totter down, John,
But hand in hand we'll go,
And sleep thegither at the foot,
John Anderson my jo.

FAREWELL TO AYR

TUNE—"Roslin Castle"

THE gloomy night is gath'ring fast,
Loud roars the wild inconstant blast,
Yon murky cloud is foul with rain,
I see it driving o'er the plain;
The hunter now has left the moor,

O, WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST

TUNE—"The Lass of Livingstone"

O, WERT thou in the cauld blast,
On yonder lea, on yonder lea,
My plaidie to the angry airt,
I'd shelter thee, I'd shelter thee.
Or did misfortune's bitter storms
Around thee blaw, around thee blaw,
Thy bield should be my bosom,
To share it a', to share it a'.

Or were I in the wildest waste,
Of earth and air, of earth and air,
The desert were a paradise,
If thou wert there, if thou wert there.
Or were I monarch o' the globe,
Wi' thee to reign, wi' thee to reign,
The only jewel in my crown
Wad be my queen, wad be my queen.

JOHN ANDERSON MY JO

JOHN ANDERSON my jo, John,
When we were first acquent,

Your locks were like the raven,
Your bonie brow was brent;
But now your brow is beld, John,
Your locks are like the snaw;
But blessings on your frosty pow,
John Anderson my jo.

John Anderson my jo, John,
We clamb the hill thegither;
And monie a cantie day, John,
We've had wi' ane anither:
Now we maun totter down, John,
But hand in hand we'll go,
And sleep thegither at the foot,
John Anderson my jo.

FAREWELL TO AYR

TUNE—"Roslin Castle"

THE gloomy night is gath'ring fast,
Loud roars the wild inconstant blast,
Yon murky cloud is foul with rain,
I see it driving o'er the plain;
The hunter now has left the moor,

The scattered coveys meet secure,
While here I wander, prest with care,
Along the lonely banks of Ayr.

The Autumn mourns her rip'ning corn
By early Winter's ravage torn;
Across her placid, azure sky,
She sees the scowling tempest fly:
Chill runs my blood to hear it rave,
I think upon the stormy wave,
Where many a danger I must dare,
Far from the bonie banks of Ayr.

'Tis not the surging billow's roar,
'Tis not that fatal, deadly shore;
Tho' death in ev'ry shape appear,
The wretched have no more to fear:
But round my heart the ties are bound,
That heart transpierc'd with many a wound:
These bleed afresh, those ties I tear,
To leave the bonie banks of Ayr.

Farewell, old Coila's hills and dales,
Her heathy moors and winding vales;
The scenes where wretched fancy roves,
Pursuing past, unhappy loves!

Farewell, my friends! Farewell, my foes!
My peace with these, my love with those:
The bursting tears my heart declare —
Farewell, the bonie banks of Ayr.

MY HEART'S IN THE HIGHLANDS

My heart's in the Highland's, my heart is not here;
My heart's in the Highlands a-chasing the deer;
Chasing the wild deer, and following the roe,
My heart's in the Highlands wherever I go.
Farewell to the Highlands, farewell to the North,
The birth-place of valor, the country of worth;
Wherever I wander, wherever I rove,
The hills of the Highlands for ever I love.

Farewell to the mountains high cover'd with snow;
Farewell to the straths and green valleys below;
Farewell to the forests and wild-hanging woods;
Farewell to the torrents and loud-pouring floods.
My heart's in the Highlands, my heart is not here;
My heart's in the Highlands a-chasing the deer;
Chasing the wild deer, and following the roe,
My heart's in the Highlands. wherever I go.

MACPHERSON'S FAREWELL

FAREWELL, ye dungeons dark and strong,
The wretch's destinie!
Macpherson's time will not be long
On yonder gallows tree.

CHORUS.

Sae rantingly, sae wantonly,
Sae dauntingly gaed he;
He play'd a spring and danc'd it round,
Below the gallows tree.

Oh, what is death but parting breath?
On monie a bloody plain
I've dar'd his face, and in this place
I scorn him yet again!
Sae rantingly, &c.

Untie these bands from off my hands,
And bring to me my sword;
And there's no man in all Scotland,
But I'll brave him at a word.
Sae rantingly, &c.

I've liv'd a life of sturt and strife;
I die by treacherie:
It burns my heart I must depart
And not avengèd be.
Sae rantingly, &c.

Now farewell light, thou sunshine bright,
And all beneath the sky!
May coward shame disdain his name,
The wretch that dares not die!
Sae rantingly, &c.

BANNOCKBURN

ROBERT BRUCE'S ADDRESS TO HIS ARMY

To its ain Tune

Scots, wha hae wi' Wallace bled,
Scots, wham Bruce has aften led,
Welcome to your gory bed,
Or to victory!

Now's the day, and now's the hour;
See the front o' battle lower;
See approach proud Edward's power,
Chains and slavery!

The wretch that wad a tyrant own,
And the wretch his true-born brother,
Who would set the mob aboon the throne,
May they be damn'd together!
Who will not sing, "God save the King,"
Shall hang as high's the steeple;
But while we sing, "God save the King,"
We'll ne'er forget the People!

A MAN'S A MAN FOR A' THAT

Is there, for honest poverty,
That hangs his head, an' a' that?
The coward-slave, we pass him by,
We dare be poor for a' that;
For a' that, an' a' that,
Our toils obscure, an' a' that;
The rank is but the guinea stamp;
The man's the gowd for a' that.

What tho' on hamely fare we dine,
Wear hodden-gray, an' a' that;
Gie fools their silks, and knaves their wine,
A man's a man for a' that.

For a' that, an' a' that,
Their tinsel show, an' a' that;
The honest man, tho' e'er sae poor,
Is king o' men for a' that.

Ye see yon birkie, ca'd a lord,
Wha struts, an' stares, an' a' that;
Tho' hundreds worship at his word,
He's but a coof for a' that:
For a' that, an' a' that,
His riband, star, an' a' that,
The man o' independent mind,
He looks and laughs at a' that.

A prince can mak a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that;
But an honest man's aboon his might,
Guid faith he mauna fa' that!
For a' that, an' a' that,
Their dignities, an' a' that,
The pith o' sense, an' pride o' worth,
Are higher rank than a' that.

Then let us pray that come it may,
As come it will for a' that;

That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth,
May bear the gree, an' a' that.
For a' that, an' a' that,
It's coming yet, for a' that,
That man to man, the warld o'er,
Shall brothers be for a' that.

NOTES

Page 1, line 8. Butler (Samuel, 1612–1680). Author of *Hudibras (1663–1678), a mock-heroic poem satirizing Puritanism and popular in the court of Charles II. "It was, however, the scandal of the age, that though the king was lavish in promises, he never did anything to relieve Butler's poverty. . . . He lived in poverty and obscurity for seventeen years after the first appearance of Hudibras. — EDMUND GOSSE, in Dictionary of National Biography.

"My first favorite books had been Hudibras and Tristram Shandy." — Carlyle. Froude, Vol. I., p. 396.

l. 7. The inventor of a spinning-jenny. Even he — James Hargreaves (17 –1778) — was driven from his home in Lancashire by a mob of spinners on the old-fashioned wheel, who feared they would be thrown out of employment by his invention.

l. 17. more than one splendid monument. For more information in regard to the monuments erected to the memory of Burns, see a well-illustrated article in the Art Journal, Vol. 49, p. 238.

Page 2, line 4. the sixth narrative of his Life. The Life of Robert Burns. By J. G. Lockhart, LL.B. Edinburgh, 1828. There were even more than five before. "The four principal biographers of our poet, Heron, Currie, Walker, and Irving," etc. — LOCKHART: Life of Burns, chap. viii. Cromek and Peterkin had also written narratives of the poet's life. See bibliography in Blackie's Life of Burns (Great Writers Series) and note to article on Burns in Dict. of Nat. Biog.

l. 6. Lockhart (John Gibson, 1794–1854) is best known as the biographer of Sir Walter Scott, whose son-in-law he was.

l. 23. Sir Thomas Lucy, according to a now discredited tradition, prosecuted Shakespeare for poaching in his deer park, which was near Charlecote Hall, three miles from Stratford.

l. 24. John a Combe was a well-to-do and (according to tradition) usurious citizen of Stratford, from whom Shakespeare purchased many acres of land, and for whom, at his laughing request, Shakespeare is said to have proposed the following epitaph: —

> "Ten-in-the-Hundred lies here ingrav'd;
> 'Tis a hundred to ten his soul is not sav'd.
> If any man asks, 'Who lies in this tomb?'
> 'Oh, ho!' quoth the Devil, 'tis my John-a-Combe.'"

— Cf. HALLIWELL-PHILLIPPS' Outlines of Shakespeare's Life.

Page 3, line 9. Honorable Excise Commissioners. The excise is an inland duty levied on certain commodities of home produce, such as ale, spirits, tobacco, etc., or on their manufacture or sale. Gentlemen of the Caledonian Hunt. An association of Scotch noblemen and gentry. Burns dedicated to them the second edition of his poems (the first Edinburgh edition). The following excerpt from the minutes of a meeting of the association, held at Edinburgh, January 10, 1787, may be of interest in this connection: "A motion being made by the Earl of Glen-cavin, and seconded by Sir John Whitefoord, in favor of Mr. Burns of Ayrshire, who had dedicated the new Edition of his Poems to the Caledonian Hunt. The meeting were of the opinion, that, in consideration of his superior merit as well as of the compliment paid to them, Mr. Hagart should be directed to subscribe for one hundred copies, in their name, for which he should pay to Mr. Burns, twenty-five pounds, upon the publication of his book." — Bibliography of Robert Burns. (James Gibson, editor.)

l. 11. Ayr Writers. In Scotland the term "writer" is applied to law agents, attorneys, and sometimes to their principal clerks.

l. 12. New and Old Light Clergy. Two factions into which the church of Scotland was split. The former, under the leadership of Blair and Robertson, were radical and progressive, the latter adhered to strict Calvinistic views. Burns sided with the New Lights. Cf. p. 62 and p. 93.

l. 23. Dr. Currie. Dr. James Currie (1756–1805), a Scotch physician, published in 1800, in behalf of the family of the poet, an edition of the poems, introduced by a Life of Burns. Mr. Walker. A life of Burns, by Josiah Walker, was prefixed to an edition of the poems in 1811, and separately printed.

Page 5, line 10. Constable's Miscellany. It consisted of a series of original works, and of standard works republished in cheap form, and was the earliest attempt to popularize good literature. Lockhart's Life of Burns appeared in this form (dated 1828), — a duodecimo volume of 310 pages. The series was projected in 1825 by Archibald Constable (1774–1827), the famous Edinburgh publisher of Scott's novels.

l. 21. Mr. Morris Birkbeck. His book was entitled, Notes on a Journey in America, from the Coast of Virginia to the Territory of Illinois, London, 1818.

Page 9, line 1. Titan. The Titans were twelve children of Uranus and Gæa (Heaven and Earth), and typified the lawless, brute forces of nature. In their wars with Zeus they piled mountains upon mountains in attempting to scale heaven.

l. 11. Fergus[s]on (Robert, 1750–1774). One of his best poems was The Farmer's Ingle, from which Burns is said to have derived the idea of his Cotter's Saturday Night. Ramsay (Allan, 1686–1758). "In some respects the best pastoral writer in the world."—LEIGH HUNT. For an interesting discussion of Burns's style, cf. R. L. Stevenson: Some Aspects of Robert Burns in Familiar Studies of Men and Books. The following sentences are quoted from the same: "To Ramsay and to Fergusson, then, he was indebted in a very uncommon degree, not only following their tradition and using their measures, but directly and avowedly imitating their pieces. . . . When we remember Burns's obligations to his predecessors, we must never forget his immense advances on them. They had already 'discovered' nature; but Burns discovered poetry — a higher and more intense way of thinking of the things that go to make up nature, a higher and more ideal key of words in which to speak of them." Cf. also p. 70, line 6.

Page 10, line 25. Sir Hudson Lowe (1769–1844). A British general who was governor of St. Helena during Napoleon's captivity there (1815–1821).

Page 11, line 1. amid the melancholy main. Quoted from stanza XXX. of the Castle of Indolence, by James Thomson (1700–1748).

Page 12, line 12. The Daisy. Cf. To a Mountain Daisy.

l. 14. wee, cowering, etc. Cf. To a Mouse.

l. 15. thole. To endure. dribble. Drizzle. cranreuch. ɔar frost.

l. 16. Winter. Cf. Winter: a Dirge.

l. 20. it raises his thoughts, etc. Psalms civ. 3. Burns in a ıte to the poem, Winter: a Dirge, says: "It [winter] is my st season for devotion; my mind is rapt up in a kind of thusiasm to Him who, in the pompous language of Scripture, valks on the wings of the wind.' In one of these seasons, just ter a tract of misfortunes, I composed the following song." — ɔmmonplace Book, April, 1784.

Page 13, line 6. Arcadian illusion. Arcadia was a district in e heart of the Peloponnesus, shut in on all sides by mountains, ıere dwelt a simple, pastoral people, fond of music and danc- ɜ; hence it has become a synonym for ideal rustic simplicity.

Page 17, line 6. "Si vis me flere, dolendum est primum ipsi i; tum tua me infortunia laedent." — HORACE: De Arte Po- ca. Liber II, 102, 103. If you wish me to weep, you must st feel grief yourself; then your sorrows will touch me.

Page 21, line 20. Letters to Mrs. Dunlop. Cf. "Robert ırns and Mrs. Dunlop. Correspondence now published in full : the first time with elucidations by William Wallace." 2 vols. ıw York, 1898. Cf. also extract from letter on pp. 34–35.

Page 22, line 12. Virgins of the Sun. Knights. . . . Sara- ıs. . . . Chiefs, etc. Probably allusions to Moore's Lalla ɔokh, Scott's Talisman and Ivanhoe, and Cooper's Leather- ocking Tales.

Page 24, line 13. vates. Soothsayer, prophet.

l. 20. Minerva Press. A printing house in London, noted for the publication of trashy, sentimental novels.

Page 25, line 25. Mossgiel. A farm near Mauchline, about 118 acres in extent, on which Burns and his brother worked (1784–1786), and where he wrote many of his finest poems. Tarbolton. A parish in which William Burness, father of the poet, rented a farm during the last six years of his life (1777–1784).

Page 26, line 2. Crockford's. A fashionable gambling resort in London. Tuileries. A famous palace in Paris, begun by Catherine de Medici in 1564, burned by the Commune in 1871.

l. 5. it is hinted that he should have been born two centuries ago, etc. A probable allusion to the idea developed by Macaulay in his Essay on Milton (Edinburgh Review, August, 1825), that "as civilization advances, poetry almost necessarily declines."

Page 27, line 1. Theocritus (3d century B.C.). A Greek poet; a writer of pastoral poetry, of idyls — "little pictures of life."

l. 3. Council of Trent. A council held at Trent (1545–1563), which condemned the leading doctrines of the Reformation concerning the Bible, original sin, and justification by faith.

l. 4. Roman Jubilee. A solemn festival of the Catholic Church, usually held once in twenty-five years. The year 1900 is a Jubilee Year.

Page 28, line 22. Retzsch (Moritz, 1779–1857). A German etcher and painter, who illustrated the works of Goethe, Schiller, and Shakespeare.

Page 29, line 4. Boreas. The north wind. fell. Keen. doure. Sullen, stubborn.

l. 6. Phoebus. The sun. glowr. Stare.

l. 7. lift. The sky.

l. 12. burns. Brooks. wreeths. Drifts.

l. 14. bock'd. Gushed.

Page 30, line 7. thowes. Thaws.

l. 8. snaw-broo. Snow-broth.

l. 9. spate. A sweeping torrent after a rain or thaw.

l. 14. gumlie jaups. Muddy jets.

l. 15. Poussin (Nicholas, 1594–1665). A noted French historical and landscape painter. He painted a picture called "The Deluge," to which Carlyle may refer, but which Ruskin in Modern Painters dismisses with a brief criticism as "uncharacteristic."

l. 22. Smithy of the Cyclops. Cf. Odyssey, IX. yoking of Priam's Chariot. Cf. Iliad, XXIV.

l. 23. Burn-the-wind. Blacksmith.

Note. Fabulosus Hydaspes! From the familiar Ode of Horace beginning "Integer vitæ" (Lib. I., Car. XXII.). The Hydaspes is a tributary of the Indus; on its banks Alexander defeated Porus (B.C. 327). It was called fabulosus, because it was in the far East, about which unexplored region numberless stories were afloat in Rome.

Page 31, line 23. Defoe (Daniel, 1661–1731). Best known to-day as the author of Robinson Crusoe. Richardson (Samuel, 1689–1761). Called the founder of the English domestic novel.

Page 32, line 10. red-wat-shod. Wat means wet. The whole expression — wading in blood.

l. 17. Professor Stewart (Dugald, 1753–1828). A famous Scottish philosopher who held the chair of moral philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. During the early years of his professorship he spent his summers at Catrine, on the water of Ayr, not far from Mossgiel; and there formed a friendship with the poet. Cf. note on p. 25, line 25. The passage quoted by Carlyle is to be found in Stewart's Works, edited by Sir William Hamilton. Edinburgh: 1858, Vol. X., p. cxl.

Page 33, line 2. Keats (John, 1796–1821). An English poet whose Ode to a Nightingale, Ode on a Grecian Urn, and Eve of St. Agnes one should read before assenting to Carlyle's harsh criticism. For a fairer criticism see Matthew Arnold's Essay on John Keats.

l. 18. Novum Organum. The title of Lord Bacon's greatest philosophical work, which was completed in 1620. The words mean "new instrument."

Page 34, line 19. doctrine of association — of ideas.

l. 22. We know nothing, etc. From a letter addressed to Mrs. Dunlop, dated Ellisland, New-year-day Morning, 1789. Cf. note on p. 21, line 20.

Page 37, line 6. ourie. Shivering, drooping.

l. 7. brattle. Fury.

l. 9. deep-lairing. Deep-wading. sprattle. Scramble.

l. 10. scar. Cliff. A steep, bare, rocky place on the side of a hill.

l. 11. Ilk. Every.

l. 15. chittering. Trembling with cold.

Page 38, line 1. aiblins. Perhaps.

l. 5. Dr. Slop and uncle Toby. Characters in Laurence Sterne's Tristram Shandy, — a favorite book of Carlyle's.

l. 11. Indignation makes verses. Cf. "Si natura negat, fecit indignatio versum." — JUVENAL (Junius, a Roman satirist, 120), Sat. i. 79. If nature denies the ability, "indignation kes verses."

Page 39, line 1. Johnson (Samuel, 1709–1784). A biographer, essayist, critic, versifier, and lexicographer. He is reported to have said, "Dear Bathurst was a man to my heart's content: he hated a fool, and he hated a rogue, and he hated a Whig; he was a very good hater." — BOSWELL: Life of Johnson.

l. 13. Furies of Æschylus. Æschylus (525–426) is accounted the greatest of Greek tragic poets. The allusion is to his tragedy called The Eumenides, in which the Furies compose the chorus.

Page 40, line 17. Cacus. A giant and son of Vulcan, who, according to Roman mythology, lived near the spot where Rome was built. He stole from Hercules some of the cattle that had belonged to Geryon, dragging them backward into his cave under the Aventine, so that their tracks appeared to lead outward. But Hercules found them by their lowing and choked to death the thief, incendia vana vomentem. For the particulars of the story see Æneid, Book VIII., lines 190–267.

l. 18. sturt. Struggle.

l. 19. Nimrods. Nimrod was a mighty hunter. Gen. x. 8, 9. I Chron. i. 10.

Page 41, line 4. Thebes. The chief city of Bœotia. The fortunes and misfortunes of Œdipus, king of Thebes, and his race, furnished many themes for the tragic poets. Pelops' line. This line included Atreus, Agamemnon, Orestes, and Ephigenia. Cf. Milton's lines in Il Penseroso: —

> "Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
> In sceptred pall come sweeping by,
> Presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line,
> Or the tale of Troy divine."

Page 43, line 9. he is not the Tieck but the Musäus of tale. Ludwig Tieck (1773–1853) and Johann Karl A Musäus (1735–1787) were German authors; the former v poet and critic; the latter was noted chiefly for his Folk- of the Germans. About three years before writing the on Burns, Carlyle was engaged in translating represen works of both (cf. Introduction, p. xxii.). The transla together with an essay on each by Carlyle, constitute Vol. the German Romances, from which the following passage quoted, in order that those who are not "our German read may feel in some degree the force of the distinction betwee two authors: "A very slight power of observation will fice to convince us that Tieck is no ordinary man; but a Poet, a Poet born as well as made. . . . He is no mere obs and compiler; rendering back to us, with additions or sul tions, the Beauty which existing things have of themselves sented to him; but a true Maker, to whom the actual external is but the excitement for ideal creations, represe and ennobling its effects." Of Musäus, "His style sp with metaphors, sometimes just and beautiful, often nev surprising; but it is laborious, unnatural, and diffuse. Musäus is, in fact, no poet; he can see, and describe with graces what he sees; but he is nothing, or very little, Maker. His imagination is not powerless: it is like a bi feeble wing, which can fly from tree to tree: but never or a moment into the æther of Poetry, to bathe in its serene splendor, with the region of the Actual lying far below, and brightened into beauty by radiance not its own."

Page 44, line 16. raucle carlin. Fearless old crone. wee Apollo. "A pigmy scraper with his fiddle."

l. 17. Son of Mars. A soldier.

l. 19. Poosie-Nansie. The name of the keeper of the ale-house.

Page 45, line 2. Caird. A travelling tinker.

l. 4. brats and callets. Loose women.

l. 12. Teniers (David, 1610–1690). A noted Flemish genre, landscape, and portrait painter.

l. 17. Beggars' Opera. A satirical opera by John Gay (1728). Cf. Century Cyclopædia of Names.

l. 18. Beggars' Bush. A comedy by Fletcher and others, performed at court in 1622. Cf. Century Cyclopædia of Names.

Page 46, line 17. Ossorius the Portugal Bishop (Osorio, Jeronymo, 1506–1580). Called the Cicero of Portugal.

Page 48, line 19. Fletcher (Andrew Fletcher of Saltoun, 653–1716). A Scottish writer whose chief claim to lasting ame appears to hang upon the following remark, which was ade in a letter to the Marquis of Montrose: "I knew a very ise man that believed that if a man were permitted to make ll the ballads, he need not care who should make the laws of a ation."

Page 49, line 25. Our Grays and Glovers. Thomas Gray 1716–1771) is best known as the writer of The Elegy in a ountry Churchyard. For a fairer estimate of his work, see Matthew Arnold's Essay on Thomas Gray. Richard Glover (1712–1785). Cf. Gosse, Eighteenth Century Literature.

Page 50, line 4. Goldsmith (Oliver, 1728–1774). Compare his verses with those of Pope, for example, or his Vicar of Wakefield with Johnson's Rasselas, to find out why he was an "exception."

l. 5. Johnson. Cf. note on p. 39, line 1. The Rambler was a semi-weekly, issued 1750–1752 and following in the track of Addison's and Steele's Spectator. The Latinized style of the essays in the Rambler is noted for its studied avoidance of common English words. Rasselas (1759) is a romance, the scene of which is laid in the Orient.

l. 16. Boston (Thomas, 1676–1732). A noted Scotch Presbyterian divine. He wrote Human Nature in its Fourfold State in 1720.

l. 24. Lord Kames (Henry Home, 1696–1782). A Scottish judge and philosophical writer; author of Elements of Criticism.

Page 51, line 1. Hume (David, 1711–1776). A Scottish philosopher and historian. See the last two paragraphs of Carlyle's Essay on Boswell's Johnson for an interesting comparison between Hume and Johnson. Robertson (William, 1721–1793). A Scottish historian and clergyman. Smith (Adam, 1723–1790). A celebrated Scottish political economist, — one of the founders of the science. His chief work is An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations (1776).

l. 11. Racine (Jean Baptiste, 1639–1699). A French tragic poet. Voltaire (François Marie Arouet de, 1694–1778). A French poet, essayist, and critic. Batteux (Charles, 1713–1780). A French critic, chiefly noted as a writer on esthetics

Boileau-Despréaux (Nicholas, 1636–1711). A French critic, satirist, and poet.

l. 13. Montesquieu (Baron de la Brède et de, Charles de Secondat, 1689–1755). A French philosopher. Mably (Gabriel Bonnot, Abbé de, 1709–1785). A French publicist.

l. 15. Quesnay (François, 1694–1774). A French political economist; founder of the school of physiocrats. Adam Smith's indebtedness to Quesnay is denied by John Rae in his Life of Adam Smith, p. 215. London, 1895.

l. 19. La Flèche. A town in the department of Sarthe, France, on the Loire, where Hume spent three years. He describes himself as wandering about there "in solitude, dreaming the dream of his philosophy"; and there he composed his first work, the Treatise of Human Nature.

Page 54, line 3. A wish, etc. From his epistle To the Guidwife of Wauchope House.

l. 10. bear. Barley.

Page 55, l. 22. he never attains to any clearness regarding himself, etc. Yet in his autobiographical letter to Dr. Moore (which is quoted in Currie's Life) he wrote: "It was ever my opinion that the great, unhappy mistakes and blunders, both in a rational and religious point of view, of which we see thousands daily guilty, are owing to their ignorance or mistaken notions of themselves. To know myself, had been all along my constant study. I weighed myself, alone; I balanced myself with others; I watched every means of information, how much ground I occupied as a man and as a poet; I studied assiduously Nature's design, where she seemed to have intended the various lights and shades in my character."

l. 23. he never ascertains his peculiar aim. In the same autobiographical letter, from which a quotation was made above, are the following sentences: "The great misfortune of my life was never to have an aim. I had felt early some stirrings of ambition, but they were the blind gropings of Homer's Cyclops round the walls of his cave. I saw my father's situation entailed on me perpetual labor. The only two doors by which I could enter the fields of fortune were — the most niggardly economy or the little chicaning art of bargain-making. The first is so contracted an aperture, I never could squeeze myself into it; the last — I always hated the contamination of its threshold!" Are any of the statements made by Carlyle and Burns in regard to the self-knowledge and lack of aim of the latter inconsistent?

Page 59, line 19. priest-like father. Cf. The Cotter's Saturday Night.

Page 60, line 15. in glory and in joy, etc. From Wordsworth's Leech Gatherer, stanza vii.; quoted also by Lockhart on the title-page of the Life of Burns.

Page 63, line 11. passions raging like demons, etc. "My passions, when once they were lighted up, raged like so many devils till they got vent in rhyme; and then conning over my verses, like a spell, soothed all into quiet!" Written with reference to about the time of his twenty-third year. — Autobiographical letter to Dr. Moore.

Page 64, line 3. hungry Ruin has him in the wind. Quoted by Burns as a reason for engaging a passage in the first ship that was to sail for Jamaica. — Autobiographical letter to Dr. Moore.

l. 7. the gloomy night is gathering fast, etc. The first line of the poem entitled Farewell to Ayr, of which Carlyle quotes the last four lines, substituting "Adieu, my native banks of Ayr," for "Farewell, the bonnie banks of Ayr."

"I had for some time been skulking from covert to covert, under all the terrors of a jail; as some ill-advised, ungrateful people had uncoupled the merciless legal pack at my heels. I had taken the last farewell of my few friends; my chest was on the road to Greenock; I had composed a song, 'The gloomy night is gathering fast,' which was to be the last effort of my muse in Caledonia, when a letter from Dr. Blacklock to a friend of mine overthrew all my schemes, by rousing my poetic ambition. His idea, that I would meet with every encouragement for a second edition, fired me so much that away I posted for Edinburgh without a single acquaintance in town, or a single letter of recommendation in my pocket." — Autobiographical letter to Dr. Moore.

Page 65, line 3. Rienzi (Nicolo Gabrini, 1313–1354) headed a revolt against the oligarchs of Rome and sought to reëstablish the Republic. His head was turned by sudden success. Resorting to violence to raise funds, he lost his popularity, and was put to death by a mob.

Page 67, line 5. Virgilium vidi tantum. Ovid: Tristia IV. 10, line 51. I have at least seen Virgil.

Page 68, line 13. Langhorne (John, 1735–1779). An English clergyman and poet. For some of his poems see Chambers' Cyclopædia of English Literature. In quoting, Scott appears to have substituted "mother wept" for "parent mourned."

l. 23. Nasmyth's picture. See frontispiece.

Page 70, line 12. in malam partem. Disparagingly.

Page 76, line 2. Mæcenases. Mæcenas was a wealthy Roman of the equestrian order, who was a friend and patron of Horace and Virgil. His name has become a synonym for a liberal patron of letters.

Page 78, line 14. Jacobin. Literally, a member of the club of radical political agitators who took their name from the Jacobin Convent in which they held their secret meetings during the French Revolution.

Page 79, line 25. corn-bing. Heap of grain.

Page 80, line 3. linking. Walking smartly.

Page 82, line 1. as a volunteer. Cf. Burns's poem, The Dumfries Volunteers.

Page 85, line 24. Patronage . . . twice cursed, etc. Cf. Merchant of Venice, IV. i. 177.

Page 87, line 23. fardels of a weary life, etc. Fardels—burdens. Cf. the famous soliloquy, Hamlet, III. i., in which are to be found the words,

> "who would fardels bear,
> To grunt and sweat under a weary life," etc.

Page 88, line 13. Roger Bacon (1219–1294). An English Franciscan monk and philosopher, who was imprisoned because of his heretical writings. Galileo (1564–1642). A famous Italian astronomer, whose doctrines were condemned by the Pope, and who was forced by the Inquisition to abjure the Copernican theory.

l. 14. Tasso (Torquato, 1544–1595). An Italian poet.

l. 15. Camoens (Luiz de, 1524–1580). The greatest Portuguese poet.

Page 91, line 18. Locke (John, 1632–1704). An English philosopher and political writer.

Page 92, line 2. Araucana. Written by Alonso de Ercilla y Zuñiga (1533–1595), a Spanish soldier and poet. The epic is based upon his experiences as a soldier: he took an active part in a campaign against the Araucanos, an Indian tribe in South America.

Page 93, line 23. Rabelais (François, 1495–1553). A brilliant, but sceptical French satirist.

Page 95, line 5. Jean Paul, Johann Paul Friedrich Richter (1763–1825), a German poet and philosopher, introduced to the English public by Carlyle's Essay on Richter (1827).

Page 96, line 17. Byron. For further light on the point under discussion, cf. Morley's Essay on Carlyle — "Mr. Carlyle's victory over Byronism," and Matthew Arnold's Essay on Byron.

Page 98, line 18. words of Milton, etc. "And long it was not after, when I was confirmed in this opinion, that he who would not be frustrate of his hope to write well hereafter in laudable things ought himself to be a true poem; that is, a composition and pattern of the best and honorablest things; not presuming to sing high praises of heroic men, or famous cities, unless he have in himself the experience and the practice of all that which is praiseworthy." — MILTON: An Apology for Smectymnuus (1642).

Page 100, line 6. Plebiscita. Laws enacted by the common people.

Page 101, line 6. Ramsgate. A popular seaside resort in Kent, about sixty miles east of London.

l. 7. Isle of Dogs. A peninsula of the Thames, three and a half miles east of St. Paul's, London, where the king's hounds were once kept.

l. 17. Valclusa Fountain. The fountain is associated with the poet Petrarch, who made his home in Valclusa, a village about ten miles east of Avignon.

INDEX TO NOTES

Æschylus, 169.
Araucana, 177.
Arcadia, 165.
Ayr Writers, 163.

Bacon, 176.
Batteaux, 172.
Birkbeck, 163.
Boileau, 173.
Butler, 161.
Byron, 177.

Cacus, 169.
Caledonian Hunt, 162.
Camoens, 176.
Constable's Miscellany, 163.
Council of Trent, 166.
Crockford's, 166.
Currie, 163.

Defoe, 167.
Dunlop, Letters to Mrs., 165.

Excise Commissioners, 162.

Fabulosus Hydaspes, 167.
Fergusson, 164.
Fletcher, 177.

Galileo, 176.
Glover, 171.
Goldsmith, 172.
Gray, 171.

Horace, 165.
Hume, 172.

Isle of Dogs, 178.

Jacobin, 176.
Johnson, 169 and 172.

Kames, Lord, 172.
Keats, 168.

La Flèche, 173.
Langhorne, 175.
Locke, 177.
Lockhart, 162.
Lowe, 164.
Lucy, 162.

Mably, 173.
Mæcenas, 176.

Milton, 171.
Minerva Press, 166
Montesquieu, 173.
Monuments to Burns, 161.
Mossgiel, 166.
Musäus, 170.

New and Old Light Clergy, 183.
Nimrod, 169.
Novum Organum, 168.

Ossorius, 171.

Pelops' line, 169.
Plebiscita, 177.

Quesnay, 173.

Rabelais, 177.
Racine, 172.
Ramsay, 164.
Ramsgate, 177.
Retzsch, 166.
Richardson, 167.
Richter, 177.
Rienzi, 175.
Robertson, 172.
Roman Jubilee, 166.

Si vis me flere, 165.
Smith, 172.
Stewart, 167.
Style of Burns, 164.

Tarbolton, 166.
Tasso, 176.
Teniers, 171.
Thebes, 169.
Theocritus, 166.
Tieck, 170.
Titan, 164.
Tuileries, 166.

Valclusa Fountain, 178.
Voltaire, 172.

Walker, 163.

GLOSSARY

A', all.
Abeigh, at a shy distance.
Aboon, above.
Acquent, acquainted.
Ae, one.
Aften, often.
A-gley, off the right line.
Aiblins, perhaps.
Ain, own.
Airt, direction, the point from which the wind blows.
Amaist, almost.
Amang, among.
Ance, once.
Ane, one.
Asklent, aslant.
Aught, eight.
Auld, old.

Baggie (dim. of bag), the stomach.
Bairns, children.
Bairntime, a family of children.
Baith, both.
Bardie, dim. of bard.
Bear, barley.
Beet, to add fuel to a fire.
Beld, bald.
Belyve, by and by.
Ben, through, into the spence or parlor.
Biel, a habitation.
Bield, shelter.
Big, to build.
Bing, heap of corn, potatoes, etc.
Birk, the birch.
Birkie, a spirited fellow.
Blate, shamefaced.
Blaw, to blow.
Bleer't, bleared.
Blin', blind.
Bluid, blood.
Bocked, vomited.
Bonie, beautiful.
Brae, the slope of a hill.
Braid, broad.
Braing't, reeled forward.
Brattle, a short race; hurry, fury.
Braw, handsome.
Breastit, did spring up or forward.
Brent, straight, smooth, unwrinkled.

Brig, bridge.
Brooses, races at country weddings, who shall first reach the bridegroom's house on returning from church.
Buirdly, strong, imposing looking, well-knit.
Bure, bore, did bear.
Burn, stream.
Burnewin, i.e. burn the wind, a blacksmith.

Ca', to drive.
Ca'd, named.
Caird, tinker.
Canna, cannot.
Cannie, careful.
Cantie, in high spirits, merry.
Cape-stane, cope-stone.
Carlin, an old woman.
Cauld, cold.
Chittering, trembling with cold.
Claes, clothes.
Clips, shears.
Clout, a patch.
Cog, a wooden dish.
Coila, from Kyle, a district of Ayrshire, so called, saith tradition, from Coil, or Coila, a Pictish monarch.
Coof, fool.
Coost, did cast.
Corn't, fed with oats.
Crack, converse, gossip.
Cranreuch, hoar frost.
Craw, to crow.
Croon, a hollow and continued moan.
Crouse, gleeful.

Daimen-icker, an ear of corn now and then.
Daur't, dared.
Daurk, a day's labor.
Deil, devil.
Dine, dinner-time.
Donsie, unlucky.
Doure, stubborn.
Dow, do, can.
Dowie, low-spirited.
Dribble, drizzle.
Driegh, tedious.
Droop-rumpl't, that droops at the crupper.
Drumly, muddy.

Ee, eye.
Een, eyes.
Eydent, diligent.

Fairin, a present, a reward.
Fause, false.
Fell, keen, biting; nippy, tasty
Fetch't, pulled intermittently.
Fidge, to fidget.
Fier, brother, friend.
Fittie-lan, the near horse of the hindmost pair in the plough.
Fleech'd, supplicated.
Fleesh, a fleece.

Flichterin', fluttering.
Fliskit, fretted.
Flit, remove.
Foggage, a second growth of grass, aftergrass.
Forbye, besides.
Fou, full, tipsy; a bushel.
Frae, from.

Gae, go.
Gar, to make.
Gat, got.
Gaun, going.
Gear, wealth, goods.
Gie, give.
Glaizie, glittering, smooth, like glass.
Glowr, stare.
Gowan, the daisy.
Gowd, gold.
Grat, wept.
Gree, a prize.
Guid, good.
Guid-willie, with hearty good will.
Gumlie, muddy, discolored.

Ha' Bible, hall-Bible.
Hae, have.
Haffets, the temples.
Hafflins, partly.
Hain'd, spared, saved.
Hald, an abiding-place.
Hallan, a particular partition wall in a cottage.
Hame, home.
Hamely, homely.
Hansel, a gift for a particular season, or the first money on any particular occasion.
Hastit, hasted.
Hawkie, cow.
Heapit, heaped.
Histie, dry, barren.
Hizzie, hussy.
Hoble, to hobble.
Hodden-gray, woollen cloth of a coarse quality, made by mingling one black fleece with a dozen white ones.
Hotch'd, fidgeted.
Howe, a hollow or dell.
Howe-backit, sunk in the back.
Hoyte, to amble crazily.

Ilk, every.
Ingle, the household fire.

Jauk, to dally, to trifle.
Jaups, splashes.
Jinker, that turns quickly, a dodger.

Kebbuck, a cheese.
Ken, know.
Ket, a hairy, matted fleece.
Knaggie, like knags, or points of rock.
Knowe, a hillock, a knoll.
Kye, cows.

Lairing, wading and sinking in snow or mud.
Laith, loth.
Laithfu', bashful.
Lane, alone.
Lanely, lonely.
Lap, did leap.
Lave, the rest.
Laverock, the lark.
Lift, sky.
Linkin, tripping.
Linn, a waterfall.
Lint, flax. Sin lint was i' the bell, since flax was in flower.
Lowping, leaping.
Lyart, gray.

Maun, must.
Mavis, the thrush.
Meere, a mare.
Melder, corn or grain of any kind sent to the mill to be ground.
Mense, good manners.
Minnie, mother.
Mony, many.
Muckle, great, big.

Na', not.
Naething, nothing.
Neibor, neighbor.

Ony, any.
Or, is often used for ere, before, p. 123.

Ourie, shivering.
Owre, over.

Paidl't, paddled.
Parritch, oatmeal boiled in water, stirabout.
Pattle, a small spade to clean the plough.
Pleugh, plough.
Pow, the head, the skull.
Pu', to pull.

Rair, to roar. Wad rair't, would have roared.
Rape, a rope.
Raucle, fearless.
Rax, to stretch.
Reestit, stood restive.
Remead, remedy.
Rig, a ridge.
Rin, run.
Ripp, a handful of unthrashed corn.
Riskit, made a noise like the tearing of roots.
Rowe, roll.
Rung, cudgel.

Sae, so.
Sair, sore.
Saugh, the willow.
Saumont-coble, salmon fishing-boat.
Saut, salt.

Sax, six.
Scar, a precipitous bank of rock or earth.
Shaw, show.
Sic; such.
Simmer, summer.
Skeigh, high-mettled, proud, saucy.
Skriegh, to scream.
Slee, shy.
Sleekit, sleek.
Slypet, slipped.
Smoor'd, smothered.
Snaw broo, melted snow.
Snell, bitter, biting.
Snoov't, went smoothly.
Sonsie, jolly, comely.
Sowpe, a small quantity of anything liquid.
Spate, a sweeping torrent after a rain or thaw.
Spean, to wean.
Spence, the country parlor.
Spier, to ask, to inquire.
Sprattle, to struggle.
Spritty, full of speets — tough-rooted plants something like rushes.
Stacher, stagger, walk unsteadily.
Staggie, dim. of stag.
Stane, stone.
Stank, a pool or pond.
Stark, strong.
Staw, did steal.
Steeve, firm, compacted.
Sten't, reared.
Steyest, steepest.
Stibble, stubble.
Stimpart, an eighth part of a Winchester bushel.
Stoure, dust.
Sturt, struggle.
Sugh, a rushing sound.
Swank, stately.
Swats, ale.
Syne, since, then.

Tawie, that allows itself peaceably to be handled.
Tawted, matted, uncombed.
Tentie, heedful.
Thegither, together.
Thole, to suffer, to endure.
Thowes, thaws.
Thrave, twenty-four sheaves of corn, including two shocks.
Timmer, timber.
Tint, lost.
Tips, rams.
Tocher, marriage portion.
Towmond, a twelvemonth.
Toyte, to totter.
Trickie, tricksy.
Tyke, a vagrant dog.

Unco, very.
Uncos, strange things, news of the country-side.

Wa', a wall.
Wad, would.
Wanchancie, unlucky.
Warld, world.
Warst, worst.
Wat, wot, know.
Wattle, a wand.
Waught, a copious drink.
Waur, to fight, to defeat.
Weel, well.
Weet, wet, dew.
Wha, who.
Whaizle, to wheeze.
Wham, whom.
Willie-waught, a hearty draught.
Win', wind.
Wintle, to stagger, to reel.
Wreeths, drifts.

Yird, the earth.
Yont, beyond.
Yowe, ewe.

Macmillan's

Pocket Series of English Classics

Cloth Uniform in Size and Binding 25 cents each

Addison's Sir Roger de Coverley. Edited by ZELMA GRAY, East Side High School, Saginaw, Mich.

Andersen's Fairy Tales. Translated from the Danish by CAROLINE PEACHEY and H. W. DULCKEN. With biographical notes and introduction by SARAH C. BROOKS, Training School, Baltimore, Md.

Arabian Nights. Edited by CLIFTON JOHNSON.

Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum and other Poems. Edited by JUSTUS COLLINS CASTLEMAN, Bloomington High School, Bloomington, Ind.

Austen's Pride and Prejudice. Edited by J. W. HEERMANS.

Austen's Sense and Sensibility. Edited by EDWIN L. MILLER.

Bacon's Essays. Edited by Professor GEORGE HERBERT CLARKE, Mercer University, Macon, Ga.

Baker's Out of the Northland.

Blackmore's Lorna Doone. Edited by ALBERT L. BARBOUR, Superintendent of Schools, Natick, Mass.

Boswell's Life of Johnson. Abridged. Edited by MARY H. WATSON.

Browning's Shorter Poems. Edited by FRANKLIN T. BAKER, Teachers College, New York City.

Mrs. Browning's Poems. Selections. Edited by HELOISE E. HERSEY.

Bryant's Thanatopsis, Sella, and other Poems. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN, Michigan Military Academy, Orchard Lake, Mich.

Bulwer-Lytton's Last Days of Pompeii. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN.

Bunyan's The Pilgrim's Progress. Edited by Professor HUGH MOFFATT, Central High School, Philadelphia, Pa.

Burke's Speech on Conciliation. Edited by S. C. NEWSOM, Manual Training High School, Indianapolis, Ind.

Burns' Poems and Songs. Selected by P. M. BUCK, JR.

Byron's Shorter Poems. Edited by RALPH HARTT BOWLES, Instructor in English in The Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H.

Byron's Childe Harold's Pilgrimage. Edited by A. J. GEORGE.

Carlyle's Essay on Burns, with Selections. Edited by WILLARD C. GORE, Armour Institute, Chicago, Ill.

Carlyle's Heroes and Hero Worship. Edited by Mrs. ANNIE RUSSELL MARBLE.

Carroll's Alice in Wonderland. Edited by CHARLES A. MCMURRY.

Chaucer's Prologue to the Book of the Tales of Canterbury, the Knight's Tale, and the Nun's Priest's Tale. Edited by ANDREW INGRAHAM.

Church's The Story of the Iliad.

Church's The Story of the Odyssey.

Coleridge's The Ancient Mariner. Edited by T. F. HUNTINGTON, Leland Stanford Junior University.

Cooper's Last of the Mohicans. Edited by W. K. WICKES, Principal of the High School, Syracuse, N. Y.

Cooper's The Deerslayer.

Cooper's The Spy. Edited by SAMUEL THURBER, JR.

Dana's Two Years before the Mast. Edited by HOMER E. KEYES, Dartmouth College.

Defoe's Robinson Crusoe. Abridged. Edited by CLIFTON JOHNSON.

Defoe's Robinson Crusoe. Part I. Edited by CHARLES R. GASTON.

DeQuincey's Confessions of an English Opium-Eater. Edited by ARTHUR BEATTY, University of Wisconsin.

DeQuincey's Joan of Arc and The English Mail-Coach. Edited by CAROL M. NEWMAN, Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

Dickens's A Christmas Carol and The Cricket on the Hearth. Edited by JAMES M. SAWIN and IDA M. THOMAS.

Dickens's David Copperfield. Edited by Edwin Fairley. 2 vols.

Dickens's A Tale of Two Cities. Edited by H. G. BUEHLER, Hotchkiss School, Lakeville, Conn., and L. MASON.

Dryden's Palamon and Arcite. Edited by PERCIVAL CHUBB.

Early American Orations, 1760-1824. Edited by LOUIS R. HELLER. Instructor in English in the De Witt Clinton High School, New York City.

Edward's Sermons. Selections. Edited by H. N. GARDINER, Professor of Philosophy, Smith College.

Emerson's Earlier Poems. Edited by O. C. GALLAGHER.

Emerson's Essays. Selected. Edited by EUGENE D. HOLMES.

Emerson's Representative Men. Edited by PHILO MELVIN BUCK, JR., William McKinley High School, St. Louis, Mo.

English Narrative Poems. Edited by CLAUDE N. FUESS and HENRY W. SANBORN.

Epoch-making Papers in United States History. Edited by M. S. BROWN, New York University.

Franklin's Autobiography.

Mrs. Gaskell's Cranford. Edited by Professor MARTIN W. SAMPSON, Indiana University.

George Eliot's Silas Marner. Edited by E. L. GULICK, Lawrenceville School, Lawrenceville, N. J.

George Eliot's Mill on the Floss. Edited by IDA AUSHERMANN.

Goldsmith's The Deserted Village and The Traveller. Edited by ROBERT N. WHITEFORD, High School, Peoria, Ill.

Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield. Edited by H. W. BOYNTON, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.
Gray's Elegy and Cowper's John Gilpin. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN.
Grimm's Fairy Tales. Edited by JAMES H. FASSETT, Superintendent of Schools, Nashua, N. H.
Hale's The Man Without a Country. Edited by S. M. TUCKER.
Hawthorne's Grandfather's Chair. Edited by H. H. KINGSLEY, Superintendent of Schools, Evanston, Ill.
Hawthorne's The House of the Seven Gables. Edited by CLYDE FURST.
Hawthorne's Mosses from an Old Manse. Edited by C. E. BURBANK.
Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales. Edited by R. H. BEGGS.
Hawthorne's Twice-Told Tales. Edited by C. R. GASTON.
Hawthorne's The Wonder-Book. Edited by L. E. WOLFE, Superintendent of Schools, San Antonio, Texas.
Holmes' Autocrat of the Breakfast Table. Preparing.
Holmes' Poems (Selections). Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN.
Homer's Iliad. Translated by LANG, LEAF and MYERS.
Homer's Odyssey. Translated by BUTCHER and LANG.
Hughes' Tom Brown's School Days. Edited by CHARLES S. THOMAS.
Huxley's Essays and Addresses. Selections. Edited by P. M. BUCK.
Irving's Alhambra. Edited by ALFRED M. HITCHCOCK, Public High School, Hartford, Conn.
Irving's Knickerbocker's History of New York. Edited by Prof. E. A. GREENLAW, Adelphi College, New York City.
Irving's Life of Goldsmith. Edited by GILBERT SYKES BLAKELY, Teacher of English in the Morris High School, New York City.
Irving's Sketch Book.
Irving's Tales of a Traveler. Edited by JENNIE CHASE.
Keary's Heroes of Asgard. Edited by CHARLES H. MORSS.
á Kempis' Imitation of Christ. Edited by BROTHER LEO.
Kingsley's The Heroes: Greek Fairy Tales. Edited by CHARLES A. MCMURRY, Ph.D.
Lamb's Essays of Elia. Edited by HELEN J. ROBINS.
Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare. Edited by A. AINGER.
Lincoln's Addresses. Edited by PERCIVAL CHUBB.
Lockhart's Life of Scott. Selections. Preparing.
Longfellow's Courtship of Miles Standard. Edited by HOMER P. LEWIS.
Longfellow's Courtship of Miles Standish, and Minor Poems. Edited by W. D. HOWE, Butler College, Indianapolis, Ind.
Longfellow's Evangeline. Edited by LEWIS B. SEMPLE, Commercial High School, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Longfellow's The Song of Hiawatha. Edited by ELIZABETH J. FLEMING, Teachers' Training School, Baltimore, Md.

Pocket Series of English Classics—CONTINUED

Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN.

Lowell's Vision of Sir Launfal. Edited by HERBERT E. BATES, Manual Training High School, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Macaulay's Essay on Addison. Edited by C. W. FRENCH, Principal of Hyde Park High School, Chicago, Ill.

Macaulay's Essay on Clive. Edited by J. W. PEARCE, Assistant Professor of English in Tulane University.

Macaulay's Essay on Johnson. Edited by WILLIAM SCHUYLER, Assistant Principal of the St. Louis High School.

Macaulay's Essay on Milton. Edited by C. W. FRENCH.

Macaulay's Essay on Warren Hastings. Edited by Mrs. M. J. FRICK, Los Angeles, Cal.

Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome, and other Poems. Edited by FRANKLIN T. BAKER, Teachers College, Columbia University.

Malory's Morte d'Arthur (Selections). Edited by D. W. SWIGGETT.

Memorable Passages from the Bible (Authorized Version). Selected and edited by FRED NEWTON SCOTT, Professor of Rhetoric in the University of Michigan.

Milton's Comus, Lycidas, and other Poems. Edited by SAMUEL E. ALLEN.

Milton's Paradise Lost, Books I and II. Edited by W. L. CRANE.

Old English Ballads. Edited by WILLIAM D. ARMES, of the University of California.

Old Testament Selections. Edited by F. N. SCOTT.

Oral English. Selections. Preparing.

Out of the Northland. Edited by EMILIE KIP BAKER.

Palgrave's Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics.

Parkman's Oregon Trail. Edited by C. H. J. DOUGLAS.

Plutarch's Lives of Caesar, Brutus, and Antony. Edited by MARTHA BRIER, Polytechnic High School, Oakland, Cal.

Poems, Narrative and Lyrical. Edited by ROBERT P. ST. JOHN.

Poe's Poems. Edited by CHARLES W. KENT, University of Virginia.

Poe's Prose Tales. Selections.

Pope's Homer's Iliad. Books I, VI, XXII, XXIV. Edited by ALBERT SMYTH, Head Professor of English Language and Literature, Central High School, Philadelphia, Pa.

Pope's Homer's Iliad. Complete. Edited by C. E. RHODES.

Pope's Homer's Odyssey. Edited by E. S. and WALDO SHUMWAY.

Pope's The Rape of the Lock. Edited by ELIZABETH M. KING.

Christina Rossetti's Poems. Selections. Edited by CHARLES BELL BURKE.

Ruskin's Crown of Wild Olive and the Queen of the Air. Edited by W. F. MELTON.

Pocket Series of English Classics—CONTINUED

Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies and The King of the Golden River. Edited by HERBERT E. BATES.
Scott's Ivanhoe. Edited by ALFRED M. HITCHCOCK.
Scott's Kenilworth. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN.
Scott's Lady of the Lake. Edited by ELIZABETH A. PACKARD.
Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel. Edited by RALPH H. BOWLES.
Scott's Marmion. Edited by GEORGE B. AITON, State Inspector of High Schools for Minnesota.
Scott's Quentin Durward. Edited by ARTHUR LLEWELLYN ENO, Instructor in the University of Illinois.
Scott's The Talisman. Edited by FREDERICK TREUDLEY, State Normal College, Ohio University.
Select Orations. Edited by A. M. HALL.
Selected Poems for Required Reading in Secondary Schools. Edited by H. N. BOYNTON.
Shakespeare's As You Like It. Edited by CHARLES ROBERT GASTON.
Shakespeare's Hamlet. Edited by L. A. SHERMAN, Professor of English Literature in the University of Nebraska.
Shakespeare's Henry V. Edited by RALPH HARTT BOWLES, Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H.
Shakespeare's Julius Caesar. Edited by GEORGE W. HUFFORD and LOIS G. HUFFORD, High School, Indianapolis, Ind.
Shakespeare's King Lear. Edited by PHILO M. BUCK.
Shakespeare's Macbeth. Edited by C. W. FRENCH.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice. Edited by CHARLOTTE W. UNDERWOOD, Lewis Institute, Chicago, Ill.
Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream. Edited by E. C. NOYES.
Shakespeare's Richard II. Edited by JAMES HUGH MOFFATT.
Shakespeare's The Tempest. Edited by S. C. NEWSON.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night. Edited by EDWARD P. MORTON.
Shelley and Keats Poems. Selections. Edited by S. C. NEWSON.
Sheridan's The Rivals, and The School for Scandal. Edited by W. D. HOWE.
Short Stories. A Collection. Edited by L. A. PITTENGER.
Southern Orators. Edited by J. H. MCCONNELL.
Southern Poets. Selections. Edited by W. L. WEBER.
Spenser's Faerie Queene, Book I. Edited by GEORGE ARMSTRONG WAUCHOPE, Professor of English in the South Carolina College.
Stevenson's Kidnapped. Edited by JOHN THOMPSON BROWN.
Stevenson's Master of Ballantrae. Edited by H. A. WHITE.
Stevenson's Travels with a Donkey and an Inland Voyage. Edited by W. L. CROSS.
Stevenson's Treasure Island. Edited by H. A. VANCE, Professor of English in the University of Nashville.

Pocket Series of English Classics—CONTINUED

Swift's Gulliver's Travels. Edited by CLIFTON JOHNSON.
Tennyson's Idylls of the King. Edited by CHARLES W. FRENCH.
Tennyson's In Memoriam. Edited by J. W. PEARCE.
Tennyson's Shorter Poems. Edited by CHARLES READ NUTTER.
Tennyson's The Princess. Edited by WILSON FARRAND.
Thackeray's Henry Esmond. Edited by JOHN BELL HENNEMAN, University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn.
Thackeray's English Humorists. Edited by J. C. CASTLEMAN.
Thoreau's Walden. Edited by BYRON RIES.
Trevelyan's Life of Macaulay. Selections. Preparing.
Virgil's Aeneid. Translated by CONINGTON. Edited by EDGAR S. SHUMWAY.
Washington's Farewell Address, and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration. Edited by WILLIAM T. PECK.
Whittier's Snowbound and other Early Poems. Edited by A. L. BOUTON.
John Woolman's Journal.
Wordsworth's Shorter Poems. Edited by EDWARD FULTON